BOOK IV. (continue●).

CHAPTER VI.

Kings of the lunar dynasty. Origin of Soma or the Moon: he carries off Tārā, the wife of Bṛihaspati: war between the gods and Asuras, in consequence: appeased by Brahmā. Birth of Budha: married to Ilā, daughter of Vaivaswata. Legend of his son Purūravas and the nymph Urvaśī: the former institutes offerings with fire: ascends to the sphere of the Gandharvas.

MAITREYA.—You have given me, reverend (preceptor), an account of (the kings of) the dynasty of the Sun. I am now desirous to hear a description of the princes who trace their lineage from the Moon, and whose race is still celebrated for glorious deeds. Thou art able to relate it to me, Brahman, if thou wilt so favour me.

PARĀŚARA.—You shall hear from me, Maitreya,* an account of the illustrious family of the Moon, which has produced (many celebrated) rulers of the earth,—a race adorned by (the regal qualities of) strength, valour, magnificence, prudence,† and activity, and enumerating, amongst its monarchs, Nahusha, Yayāti, Kārtavīryārjuna,* and others equally renowned. That race will I describe to you. Do you attend.

Atri was the son of Brahmá, the creator of the universe, who sprang from the lotos that grew from the navel of Náráyaṇa. The son of Atri was Soma¹ (the moon), whom Brahmá† installed as the sovereign of plants, of Brahmans, and of the stars.‡ Soma celebrated the Rájasúya (sacrifice); and, from the glory thence acquired, and the extensive dominion with which he had been invested, he became arrogant (and licentious), and carried off Tárá, the wife of Bṛihaspati, the preceptor of the gods. In vain Bṛihaspati sought to recover his bride; in vain Brahmá commanded, and the holy sages remonstrated: Soma refused to relinquish her.§ Uśanas,|| out of enmity to Bṛihaspati, took part with Soma.¶ Rudra, who had studied under Angiras,

Then there ensued a fierce contest, which, being on account of Táraká (or Tárá), was termed the Tárakámaya or Táraká war.§ In this, the gods, led by Rudra, hurled their missiles on the enemy;|| and the Daityas¶ (with equal determination assailed) the gods. Earth, shaken to her centre by the struggle between such foes, had recourse to Brahmá, for protection; on which he interposed, and, commanding Uśanas, with the demons, and Rudra with the deities, to desist from strife, compelled Soma to restore Tárá to her husband.†† Finding that she was pregnant,‡‡ Bṛihaspati desired her no longer to retain her burthen;§§ and, in obedience to his orders, she was delivered of a son, whom she deposited in a clump of long Munja-grass.* The child, from the moment of its birth, was endued with a splendour that dimmed the radiance of every (other) divinity; and both Brīhaspati and Soma,† fascinated by his beauty, claimed him as their child. The gods, in order to settle the dispute, appealed to Tárá; but she was ashamed, and would make no answer. As she still continued mute to their repeated applications, the child (became incensed, and) was about to curse her, saying: “Unless, vile woman, you immediately declare who is my father, I will sentence you to such a fate as shall deter every female, in future, from hesitating to speak the truth.”‡ On this, Brahmá§ (again interfered, and) pacified|| the child, and then, addressing Tárá, said: “Tell me, daughter, is this the child of Brīhaspati? or of Soma?” “Of Soma,” said Tárá, blushing.¶ As soon as she had spoken, the lord of the constellations — his countenance bright, and expanding with rapture,—embraced his son, and said: “Well done, my boy! Verily, thou art wise.” And, hence, his name was Budha.¹

It has already been related how Budha begot Purúravas by Ilá.* Purúravas¹ was (a prince) renowned for liberality, devotion, magnificence, and love of truth, and for personal beauty. Urvaśí, having incurred the imprecation of Mitra and Varuṇa, determined to take up her abode in the world of mortals, and (descending, accordingly,) beheld Purúravas. As soon as she saw him, she forgot all reserve, and, disregarding the delights of Swarga, became deeply enamoured of the prince. Beholding her infinitely superior to all other females, in grace, elegance, symmetry, delicacy, and with Buddha, any deified mortal, or 'he by whom truth is known'; or, as individually applicable,† Gautama or Śákya, son of the Raja Śuddhodana,‡ by whom, the Buddhists themselves aver, their doctrines were first promulgated. The two characters have nothing in common; and the names are identical, only when one or other is misspelt.

¹ The story of Purúravas is told much in the same strain as follows, though with some variations, and in greater or less detail, in the Váyu, Matsya, Vámana, Padma, and Bhágavata Puráṇas. It is, also, referred to in the Mahábhárata, Vol. I., p. 113. It is, likewise, the subject of the Vikrama and Urvaśí of Kálidása, in which drama the incidents offensive to good taste are not noticed. See Hindu Theatre, Vol. I., p. 187. The Matsya Puráṇa, besides this story, which is translated in the introduction to the drama, has, in another part,—c. 94,—an account of a Purúravas who, in the Chákshusha Manwantara,§ was king of Madra, and who, by the worship of Vishnú, obtained a residence with the Gandharvas.

beauty, Purúravas was equally fascinated by Urvaśi. Both were inspired by similar sentiments, and, mutually feeling that each was everything to the other, thought no more of any other object.* Confiding in his merits, Purúravas addressed the nymph, and said:† “Fair creature, I love you. Have compassion on me, and return my affection.” Urvaśi, half averting her face, through modesty, replied:‡ “I will do so, if you will observe the conditions I have to propose.”§ “What are they?” inquired the prince. “Declare them.” “I have two rams,”|| said the nymph, “which I love as children. They must be kept near my bedside, and never suffered to be carried away.¶ You must, also, take care never to be seen, by me, undressed; and clarified butter alone must be my food.” To these terms the king readily gave assent.

After this, Purúravas and Urvaśi dwelt together in Alaká, sporting amidst the groves and lotos-crowned lakes of Chaitraratha†† and the other forests there situated, for sixty-one thousand years.¹ The love of Purúravas for his bride increased every day of its duration; and, the affection of Urvaśi augmenting equally in fervour, she never called to recollection* residence amongst the immortals. Not so with the attendant spirits at the court of Indra; and nymphs, genii, and quiristers† found heaven itself but dull, whilst Urvaśi was away.‡ Knowing the agreement that Urvaśi had made with the king, Viśwávasu§ was appointed, by the Gandharvas, to effect its violation; and he, coming, by night, to the chamber where they slept, carried off one of the rams. Urvaśi was awakened by its cries, and exclaimed: “Ah me! Who has stolen one of my children? Had I a husband, this would not have happened! To whom shall I apply for aid?” The Raja overheard her lamentation, but, recollecting that he was undressed, and that Urvaśi might see him in that state, did not move from the couch. Then the Gandharvas came and stole the other ram; and Urvaśi, hearing it bleat, cried out, that a woman had no protector, who was the bride of a prince so dastardly as to submit to this outrage. highly; and, trusting that the nymph would not see his person, as it was dark, he rose, and took his sword, and pursued the robbers, calling upon them to stop and receive their punishment. At that moment the Gandharvas caused a flash of brilliant lightning to play upon the chamber; and Urvaśi beheld the king undressed: the compact was violated; and the nymph immediately disappeared. The Gandharvas, abandoning the rams, departed to the region of the gods.

Having recovered the animals, the king returned, delighted, to his couch: but there he beheld no Urvaśi; and, not finding her anywhere, he wandered, naked, over the world, like one insane. At length, coming to Kurukshetra,* he saw Urvaśi sporting, with four other nymphs of heaven, in a lake beautified with lotoses; and he ran to her, and called her his wife, and wildly implored her to return. "Mighty monarch," said the nymph, "refrain from this extravagance. I am now pregnant.† Depart at present, and come hither, again, at the end of a year, when I will deliver to you a son, and remain with you for one night." Purúravas, thus comforted, returned to his capital. Urvaśi said to her companions: "This prince is a most excellent mortal. I lived with him long and affectionately united." "It was well done of you," they replied. "He is, indeed, of comely appearance, and one with whom we could live happily for ever."

When the year had expired, Urvaśi and the monarch met at Kurukshetra,‡ and she consigned to him his first-born, Ayus; and these annual interviews were repeated, until she had borne to him five sons. She then said to Purúravas: "Through regard for me, all the Gandharvas have expressed their joint purpose to bestow upon my lord their benediction. Let him, therefore, demand a boon." The Raja replied: "My enemies are all destroyed; my faculties are all entire: I have friends and kindred, armies and treasures.* There is nothing which I may not obtain, except living in the same region with my Urvaśí. My only desire, therefore, is, to pass my life with her." When he had thus spoken, the Gandharvas brought to Purúravas a vessel with fire, and said to him: "Take this fire, and, according to the precepts of the Vedas,† divide it into three fires; then, fixing your mind upon the idea of living with Urvaśí, offer oblations; and you shall, assuredly, obtain your wishes." The Raja took the brasier, and departed, and came to a forest. Then he began to reflect, that he had committed a great folly, in bringing away the vessel of fire, instead of his bride; and, leaving the vessel in the wood, he went (disconsolate,) to his palace. In the middle of the night he awoke, and considered that the Gandharvas had given him the brasier to enable him to obtain the felicity of living with Urvaśí, and that it was absurd in him to have left it by the way. Resolving, therefore, to recover it, he rose, and went to the place where he had deposited the vessel; but it was gone. In its stead, he saw a young Āśwattha tree growing out of a Śamī-plant; and he reasoned with himself, and said: "I left, in this spot, a vessel of fire, and now behold a young Āśwattha tree growing out of a Śamī-plant. Verily, I will take these types of fire to my capital, and there, having engendered fire by their attrition, I will worship it."

Having thus determined, he took the plants to his city, and prepared their wood for attrition, with pieces of as many inches* long as there are syllables in the Gáyatrī. He recited that holy verse, and rubbed together sticks of as many inches as he recited syllables in the Gáyatrī.¹ Having thence elicited fire, he made it threefold,† according to the injunctions of the Vedas, and offered oblations with it; proposing, as the end of the ceremony, reunion with Urvaśī. In this way, celebrating many sacrifices, agreeably to the form in which offerings are presented with fire, Purúravas obtained a seat in the sphere of the Gandharvas, and

¹ It does not appear why this passage is repeated. The length of the sticks, conformably to the number of syllables in the usual form of the Gáyatrī, would be twenty-four inches. The Bhāgavata attaches to the operation a piece of mysticism of a Tāntrika origin. Purúravas, whilst performing the attrition, mentally identifies himself and Urvaśī with the two sticks, and repeats the Mantra उर्वश्चायुरसि पुह्रवाः । ‡

* Angula, 'finger-breadths.'

† Professor Wilson thinks that there may be an allusion to this in the Rigveda, I., XXXI., 4. See his Translation, Vol. I., p. 80, note b.

was no more separated from his beloved.* Thus, fire, that was, at first, but one, was made threefold,† in the present Manwantara, by the son of Ilā.¹‡

पुरुवरस एवासीत्त्रयी त्रेतामुखे नृप ।

That is, according to the commentator, the ritual was then instituted: कर्ममार्गः प्रकटो बभूव । The Matsya Purāṇa has an account of this prince’s going to the orbit of the sun and moon, at every conjunction, when oblations to progenitors are to be offered; as if obsequial rites had originated with Purúravas. The Mahābhārata¶ states some still more remarkable particulars. “The glorious Purúravas, endowed, although a mortal, with the properties of a deity, governing the thirteen islands of the ocean, engaged in hostilities with the Brahmans, in the pride of his strength, and seized their jewels, as they exclaimed against his oppression. Sanatkumára came from the sphere of Brahmá, to teach him the rules of duty; but Purúravas did not accept his instructions; and the king, deprived of understanding by the pride of his power, and actuated by avarice, was, therefore, ever accursed by the offended great sages, and was destroyed."

PURÚRAVAS had six sons,—Áyus, Dhímat, Amávasu, Viśwávasu, Śatáyus, and Śrutáyus.¹ The son of Amávasu was Bhíma;¹ his son was Káñchana;² his son was Suhotra,³ whose son was Jahnu.* This prince, whilst performing a sacrifice, saw the whole of the place† overflowed by the waters of the Ganges. Highly offended at this intrusion, his eyes red with anger, he united the spirit of sacrifice‡ with himself, by the power of his devotion, and drank up the river. The gods and sages, upon this, (came to him, and) appeased his indignation, and reobtained Gangá from him, in the capacity of his daughter; (whence she is called Jáhnaví).⁴

The son of Jahnu was Sumantu;⁵ § his son was Ajaka; engaged in devout penance, to obtain one who should be equal to Indra. Observing the intensity of his devotions, Indra was alarmed, lest a prince of power like his own should be engendered, and determined, therefore, to take upon himself the character of Kuśāmba's son.¹ He was, accordingly, born as Gádhi,* of the race of Kuśa (Kauśika). Gádhi had a daughter named Satyavatī. Řichika, of the descendants of Bhrigu, demanded her in marriage. The king was very unwilling to give his daughter to a peevish old Brahman, and demanded of him, as the nuptial present, a thousand fleet horses, whose colour should be white,† with one black ear. Řichika, having propitiated Varuṇa, the god of ocean, obtained from him, at (the holy place called) Aśwatīrtha, a thousand such steeds, and, giving them to the king, espoused his daughter.²

⁴ The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇa add, of this prince, that he was the husband of Káverí, the daughter of Yuvanáśwa, who, by the imprecation of her husband, became the Káverí river;—another indication of the Dakshiṇa origin of these works.¶ The Hari Varṇa has another Jahnu, to whom it gives the same spouse, as we shall hereafter see.

In order to effect the birth of a son, Rīchika¹ prepared a dish of rice, barley, and pulse, with butter and milk, for his wife to eat; and, at her request, he consecrated a similar mixture for her mother, by partaking of which, she should give birth to a prince of martial prowess. Leaving both dishes with his wife, — after describing, particularly, which was intended for her, and which for her mother, — the sage went forth to the forests.* When the time arrived for the food to be eaten, the queen said to Satyavatī: “Daughter, all persons wish their children to be possessed of excellent qualities, and would be mortified to see them surpassed by the merits of their mother’s brother. It will be desirable for you, therefore, to give me the mess your husband has set apart for you, and to eat of that intended for me; for the son which it is to procure me is destined to be the monarch of the whole world, whilst that which your dish would give you must be a Brahman, alike devoid of affluence, valour, and power.” Satyavatī agreed to her mother’s proposal; and they exchanged messes.

When Rīchika returned home, and beheld Satyavatī, he said to her: “Sinful woman, what hast thou done? I view thy body of a fearful appearance. Of a surety, thou hast eaten the consecrated food which was prepared for thy mother: thou hast done wrong. In that food I had infused the properties of power, and strength, and heroism; in thine, the qualities suited to a Brahman,—gentleness, knowledge, and resignation. In consequence of having reversed my plans, thy son shall follow a warrior's propensities, and use weapons, and fight, and slay. Thy mother's son shall be born with the inclinations of a Brahman, and be addicted to peace and piety." Satyavatī, hearing this, fell at her husband's feet, and said: "My lord, I have done this thing through ignorance. Have compassion on me: let me not have a son such as thou hast foretold. If such there must be, let it be my grandson, not my son." The Muni, relenting at her distress, replied: "So let it be." Accordingly, in due season she gave birth to Jamadagni; and her mother brought forth Viśwámitra.* Satyavatī afterwards became the Kauśikī river.¹ Jamadagni married Reṇuká, the daughter of Reṇu, of the family of Ikshwáku, and had, by her, the destroyer of the Kshattriya race, Paraśuráma, who was a portion of Náráyaṇa, the spiritual guide of the universe.²

LEGEND OF PARĀŚURĀMA.

(From the Mahábhárata.*)

“JAMADAGNI (the son of Richíka,¹) was a pious sage, who, by the fervour of his devotions, whilst engaged in holy study, obtained entire possession of the Vedas. Having gone to King Prasenajit, he demanded, in marriage, his daughter Reñuká; and the king gave her unto him. The descendant of Bhṛigu conducted the princess to his hermitage, and dwelt with her there; and she was contented to partake in his ascetic life. They had four sons, and then a fifth, who was Jámadagnya,[†] the last, but not the least, of the brethren. Once, when her sons were all absent to gather the fruits on which they fed, Reñuká, who was exact in the discharge of all her duties, went forth to bathe. On her way to the stream, she beheld Chitraratha, the Prince of Mṛittikávatí, with a garland of lotoses on his neck, sporting with his queen, in the water; and she felt envious of their felicity. Defiled by unworthy thoughts, wetted, but not purified, by the stream,* she returned, disquieted, to the hermitage; and her husband perceived her agitation. Beholding her fallen from perfection, and shorn of the lustre of her sanctity, Jamadagni reproved her, and was exceeding wroth. Upon this, there came her sons from the wood; first the eldest, Rumañwat, then Susheña, then Vasu, and then Viśwávasu; and each, as he entered, was successively commanded, by his father, to put his mother to death; but, amazed, and influenced by natural affection, neither of them made any reply: therefore, Jamadagni was angry, and cursed them; and they became as idiots, and lost all understanding, and were like unto beasts or birds. Lastly, Ráma returned to the hermitage, when the mighty and holy Jamadagni said unto him: 'Kill thy mother, who has sinned; and do it, son, without repining.' Ráma, accordingly, took up his axe, and struck off his mother's head; whereupon the wrath of the illustrious and mighty Jamadagni was assuaged, and he was pleased with his son, and said: 'Since thou hast obeyed my commands, and done what was hard to be performed, demand from me whatever blessings thou wilt, and thy desires shall be, all, fulfilled.' Then Ráma begged of his father these boons: the restoration of his mother to life, with forgetfulness of her having been slain, and purification from all defilement; the return of his brothers to their natural condition; and, for himself, invincibility in single combat, and length of days. And all these did his father bestow.

"It happened, on one occasion, that, during the absence of the Rishi's sons, the mighty monarch Kártavírya, (the sovereign of the Haihaya tribe, endowed, by the favour of Dattátreya, with a thousand arms, and a golden chariot that went wheresoever he willed it to go),* came to the hermitage¹ of Jamadagni, where the wife of the sage received him with all proper respect. The king, inflated with the pride of valour, made no return to her hospitality, but carried off with him, by violence, the calf of the milch-cow† of the sacred oblation,² and cast down the tall trees sur-

² In the Rájadharmā, the sons of the king carry off the calf. The Bhágavata‡ makes the king seize upon the cow, by whose rounding the hermitage. When Ráma returned, his father told him what had chanced; and he saw the cow in affliction; and he was filled with wrath. Taking up his splendid bow,¹ Bhárgava, the slayer of hostile heroes, assailed Kártavírya, who had, now, become subject to the power of death, and overthrew him in battle. With sharp arrows Ráma cut off his thousand arms; and the king perished. The sons of Kártavírya,* to revenge his death, attacked the hermitage of Jamadagni, when Ráma was away, and slew the pious and unresisting sage, who called, repeatedly, but fruitlessly, upon his valiant son. They then departed; and, when Ráma returned, bearing fuel from the thickets, he found his father lifeless, and thus bewailed his unmerited fate: 'Father, in resentment of my actions, have you been murdered by wretches as foolish as they are base. By the sons of Kártavírya are you struck down, as a deer, in the forest, by the huntsman's shafts. Ill have you deserved such a death,—you, who have ever trodden the path of virtue, and never offered wrong to any created thing. How great is the aid. Jamadagni had previously entertained Arjuna and all his train; borrowing, no doubt, these embellishments from the similar legend of Vasishtha and Viśwámitra, related in the Rámáyāna.

crime that they have committed, in slaying, with their deadly shafts, an old man, like you, wholly occupied with pious cares, and engaging not in strife! Much have they to boast of to their fellows and their friends,—that they have shamelessly slain a solitary hermit, incapable of contending in arms!’ Thus lamenting, bitterly and repeatedly, Rāma performed his father’s last obsequies, and lighted his funeral pile. He then made a vow, that he would extirpate the whole Kshattriya race. In fulfilment of this purpose, he took up his arms, and, with remorseless and fatal rage, singly destroyed, in fight, the sons of Kārtavīrya; and, after them, whatever Kshattriyas he encountered, Rāma, the first of warriors, likewise slew. Thrice seven times did he clear the earth of the Kshattriya caste;¹ and he filled, with their blood, the five large lakes of Samantapanchaka, from which he offered libations to the race of Bhrīgu. There did he behold his sire again; and the son of Richika beheld his son, and told him what to do. Offering a solemn sacrifice to the king of the gods, Jāmadagnya presented the earth to the ministering priests. To Kaśyapa he gave the altar made of gold, ten fathoms in length, and nine in height.² With the permission of Kaśyapa, the Brahmans divided it in pieces amongst them; and they were, thence, called Khaṇḍavāyana Brahmans. Having given the earth to Kaśyapa, the hero of immeasurable prowess retired to the Mahendra mountain, where he still resides: and in this manner was there enmity between him and the race of Kshattriyas; and thus was the whole earth conquered by Ráma."¹*

¹ The story, as told in the Rájadharmā section, adds, that, when Ráma had given the earth to Kaśyapa, the latter desired him to depart, as there was no dwelling for him in it, and to repair to the seashore of the south, where Ocean made for him (or relinquished to him), the maritime district named Śúrpāraka. The traditions of the Peninsula ascribe the formation of the coast of Malabar to this origin, and relate that Paraśurāma compelled the ocean to retire, and introduced Brahmans and colonists, from the north, into Kerala, or Malabar. According to some accounts, he stood on the promontory of Dilli, and shot his arrows to the south, over the site of Kerala. It seems likely, that we have proof of the local legend being, at least, as old as the beginning of the Christian era, as the Mons Pyrrhus of Ptolemy is, probably, the mountain of Paraśu or Paraśurāma. See Catalogue of Mackenzie Collection, Vol. I., Introduction, p. xcv.; and Vol. II., p. 74. The Rájadharmā also gives an account of the Kshattriyas who escaped even the thrice seven times repeated destruction of their race. Some of the Haihayas were concealed, by the earth, as women; the son of Vidúratha, of the race of Púru, was preserved in the Řiksha mountain, where he was nourished by the bears; Sarvakarman,† the son of Saudása, was saved by Parášara, performing the offices of a Śúdra; Gopati, son of Śibi, was nourished by cows, in the forests; Vatsa, the son of Pratardana, was concealed amongst the calves in a cow-pen; the son of Devíratha was secreted, by Gautama, on the banks of the Ganges; Břihadratha was preserved in Gřidhrakúfa;

The son of Viśwāmītra was Śunahśepha,* the descendant of Bhrīgu,—given by the gods, and, thence, named Devarāta.¹ Viśwāmītra had other sons, also, and descendants of Marutta were saved by the ocean. From these the lines of kings were continued; but it does not appear, from the ordinary lists, that they were ever interrupted. This legend, however, as well as that of the Rāmāyaṇa, Book I., Chapter LII., no doubt intimates a violent and protracted struggle, between the Brahmans and Kshattriyas, for supreme domination in India; as, indeed, the text of the Mahābhārata† more plainly denotes; as Earth is made to say to Kaśyapa: “The fathers and grandfathers of these Kshattriyas have been killed by the remorseless Rāma, in warfare on my account:”

एतेषां पितरश्चैव तथैव च पितामहाः ।

मदर्थं निहता युद्धे रामेणाक्षिष्टकर्मणा ॥

¹ The story of Śunahśepha is told by different authorities, with several variations. As the author of various Sūktas in the R̥ich, he is called the son of Ajigarta. The Rāmāyaṇa makes him the middle son of the sage R̥ichika, sold to Ambarīsha, king of Ayodhyā, by his parents, to be a victim in a human sacrifice offered by that prince. He is set at liberty by Viśwāmītra; but it is not added that he was adopted. The Bhāgavata‡ concurs in the adoption, but makes Śunahśepha the son of Viśwāmītra's sister,§ by Ajigarta, of the line of Bhrīgu, and states his being purchased, as a victim, for the sacrifice of Hariśchandra. (See Vol. III., p. 287, note 1.) The Vāyu makes him a son of R̥ichika, but alludes to his being the victim at Hariśchandra's sacrifice. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, Viśwāmītra called upon his sons to take the place of Śunahśepha, and, on their refusing, degraded them to the condition of Chāṇḍālas. The Bhāgavata says, that amongst whom the most celebrated were Madhuch-fifty* only of the hundred sons of Viśwāmītra were expelled their tribe, for refusing to acknowledge Śunahśepha or Devarata as their elder brother. The others consented; and the Bhāgavata† expresses this:

ज्येष्ठं मन्त्रदृशं चक्रुस्त्वामन्वच्च वयं स हि ।

"They said to the elder, profoundly versed in the Mantras, We are your followers:" as the commentator: अनुगन्तारः कनिष्ठाः स इत्यर्थः । The Rāmāyaṇa also observes, that Śunahśepha, when bound, praised Indra with Ūchās, or hymns of the R̥g-veda. The origin of the story, therefore,—whatever may be its correct version,—must be referred to the Vedas; and it, evidently, alludes to some innovation in the ritual, adopted by a part only of the Kāuśika families of Brahmins.‡

* These fifty were the elder sons.

‡ On the subject treated of in this note Professor Wilson expressed himself, at a later date, as follows:

"The story of Śunahśepa, or, as usually written, Śunahśepha, has been, for some time, known to Sanskrit students, through the version of it presented in the Rāmāyaṇa, Book I., Chapter LX., Schlegel; LXIII., Gorresio. He is, there, called the son of the Rishi Ūchika, and is sold for a hundred cows, by his father, to Ambarisha, king of Ayodhyā, as a victim for a human sacrifice. On the road, he comes to lake Pushkara, where he sees Viśwāmītra, and implores his succour, and learns, from him, a prayer, by the repetition of which, at the stake, Indra is induced to come and set him free. It is obvious that this story has been derived from the Veda; for Viśwāmītra teaches him, according to Schlegel's text, two Gāthās,—according to Gorresio's, a Mantra: but the latter also states, that he propitiated Indra by Ūchās,—Mantras of the R̥g-veda (R̥gḥis tushāva devendram), Vol. I., p 249. Manu also alludes to the story (X., 105), where it is said that Ajigarta incurred no guilt by giving up his son to be sacrificed; as it was to preserve himself and family from perishing with hunger. Kullūka Bhāṭṭa names the son, Śunahśepha, and refers, for his authority, to the Bahvricha Brāhmaṇa. The story is told, in full detail, in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa; but the Raja is named Hariśchandra. He has no sons, and worships Varuṇa, in order to obtain a son, promising to sacrifice to him his first-born. He has a son, in consequence, named Rohita; but, when Varuṇa claims his victim, the king delays the sacrifice, under various pretexts, from time to time, until Rohita attains adolescence, when his father communicates to him the fate for which he was destined. Rohita refuses submission, and spends several years in the forests, away from home. He, at last, meets, there, with Ajigarta, a Rishi, in great distress, and persuades him to part with his second son, Śunahśepha, to be substituted for Rohita, as an offering to Varuṇa. The bargain is concluded; and Śunahśepha is about to be sacrificed, when, by the advice of Viśwāmitra, one of the officiating priests, he appeals to the gods, and is, ultimately, liberated. The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa has supplied the commentator with the circumstances which he narrates, as illustrative of the series of hymns in this section. Dr. Rosen doubts if the hymns bear any reference to the intention of sacrificing Śunahśepha: but the language of the Brāhmaṇa is not to be mistaken; as Ajigarta not only ties his son to the stake, but goes to provide himself with a knife with which to slay him. At the same time, it must be admitted, that the language of the Suktas is somewhat equivocal, and leaves the intention of an actual sacrifice open to question. The Bhāgavata follows the Aitareya and Manu, in terming Śunahśepha the son of Ajigarta, and names the Raja, also, Hariśchandra. In the Vishṇu Purāṇa, he is called the son of Viśwāmitra, and is termed, also, Deva-rāta, or god-given. But this relates to subsequent occurrences, noticed, in like manner, by the other authorities, in which he becomes the adopted son of Viśwāmitra, and the eldest of all his sons; such of whom as refused to acknowledge his seniority being cursed to become the founders of various barbarian and outcaste races. Viśwāmitra's share in the legend may, possibly, intimate his opposition, and that of some of his disciples, to human sacrifices." Translation of the Rigveda, Vol. I., p. 59, note a.

Now, these Gotras, or some of them, at least, no doubt existed, partaking more of the character of schools of doctrine, but in which teachers and scholars were very likely to have become of one family by intermarrying; and the whole, as well as their original founder, imply the interference of the Kshattriya caste with the Brahmanical monopoly of religious instruction and composition.

¹ Here is, probably, an error; for the Vāyu, Bhāgavata, and Brahma agree in making Śunaka the son of Gṛtsamada, and father of Śaunaka.

* Corrected, throughout this chapter, from "Ghrtsamada".

"It is to be observed, that this Gṛtsamada, who is here described as belonging to the regal lineage of Purūravas, is the reputed Ṛishi of many hymns in the second Maṇḍala of the Rigveda. Regarding him the Commentator Śāyaṇa has the following remarks, in his introduction to that Maṇḍala:

* * * * *

"The seer (i. e., he who received the revelation) of this Maṇḍala was the Ṛishi Gṛtsamada. He, being formerly the son of Śunahotra in the family of the Āngirases, was seized by the Asuras, at the time of sacrifice, and rescued by Indra. Afterwards, by the command of that god, he became the person named Gṛtsamada, son of Śunaka, in the family of Bhṛigu. Thus, the Anukramāṇikā (Index to the Rigveda) says of him: 'That Gṛtsamada, who, having been an Āngirasa, and son of Śunahotra, became a Bhārgava and son of Śunaka, saw the second Maṇḍala.' So, too, the same Śaunaka says, in his Ṛishi-anukramaṇa, regarding the Maṇḍala beginning with 'Thou, O Agni:—Gṛtsamada, son of Śunaka, who is declared to have been, naturally, an Āngirasa, and the son of Śunahotra, became a Bhṛigu.' Hence, the seer of the Maṇḍala is the Ṛishi Gṛtsamada, son of Śunaka.'

"It will be noticed, that, (unless we are to suppose a different Gṛtsamada to be intended in each case,) there is a discrepancy between the Purāṇas on the one hand, and Śāyaṇa and the Anukramāṇikā on the other; as the Purāṇas make Gṛtsamada the son of Sunahotra or Sunahotra, and the father of Śunaka; whilst the Anukramāṇikā, followed by Śāyaṇa, represents the same personage as having been, indeed, originally, the son of Śunahotra, of the race of Angiras, but as having afterwards become, by what process does not appear, the son of Śunaka, of the race of Bhṛigu." Original Sanskrit Texts, Part I., p. 228 (2nd ed.).

"The son of Grītsamada was Śunaka, whose son was Śaunaka. Brahmins, Kshattriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras were born in his race; Brahmins by distinguished deeds." The existence of but one caste in the age of purity, however incompatible with the legend which ascribes the origin of the four tribes to Brahmā, is everywhere admitted. Their separation is assigned to different individuals;—whether accurately to any one may be doubted: but the notion indicates that the distinction was of a social or political character.

¹ The eight branches of medical science† are: 1. Śalya, extraction of extraneous bodies; 2. Śálákya, treatment of external organic affections: these two constitute surgery; 3. Chikitsá, administration of medicines, or medical treatment in general; 4. Bhú-tavidyá, treatment of maladies referred to demoniac possession; 5. Kaumárabhřitya, midwifery and management of children; 6. Agada, alexipharmacy; 7. Rasáyana, alchemical therapeutics; 8. Vájikaraṇa, use of aphrodisiacs. Dhanwantari, according to the Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa, was preceded, in medical science, by Átreya, Bharadvāja, and Charaka: his pupil Suśruta is the reputed author of a celebrated work still extant. It seems probable that Kási or Benares was, at an early period, a celebrated school of medicine. §

² Some rather curious legends are connected with this prince, in the Vāyu and Brahma Purāṇas, and Hari Vaṁśa, and, especially, in the Kási Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa. According to these authorities, Śiva and Párvati, desirous of occupying Kási, which

Divodāsa possessed, sent Nikumbha, one of the Gaṇas of the former, to lead the prince to the adoption of Buddhist doctrines; in consequence of which, he was expelled from the sacred city, and, according to the Vāyu, founded another on the banks of the Gomatī. We have, however, also some singular, though obscure, intimations of some of the political events of this and the succeeding reign. The passage of the Vāyu is:

भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पुत्राणां शतमुत्तमधन्विनाम् ।
हत्वा निवेशयामास दिवोदासी नराधिपः ॥
भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य राज्यं तु हृतं तेन बलीयसा ।

“The king Divodāsa, having slain the hundred sons of Bhadrāsreṇya, took possession of his kingdom, which was conquered by that hero. The son of Bhadrāsreṇya, celebrated by the name of Durdama, was spared, by Divodāsa, as being an infant. Prataṛdana was the son of Divodāsa, by Dṛishadwatī; and by that great prince, desirous of destroying all enmity, (was recovered) that (territory), which had been seized by that young boy, (Durdama).” This is not very explicit; and something is wanted to complete the sense. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa* tell the story twice over, chiefly in the words of the Vāyu, but with some additions. In Ch. 29 we have, first, the first three lines of the above extract; then comes the story of Benares being deserted; we then have the two next lines;† then follow :‡

* In Chapters XXIX. and XXXII.

† My MSS., and the printed and lithographed editions, of the Hari-vamśa do not bear out these unimportant statements.

"That prince (Durdama) invading his patrimonial possessions, the territory which Divodása had seized by force was recovered by the gallant son of Bhadrásreṇya, Durdama, a warrior desirous, mighty king, to effect the destruction of his foes." Here the victory is ascribed to Durdama, in opposition to what appears to be the sense of the Váyu, and what is, undoubtedly, that of our text, which says, that he was called Pratardana, from destroying the race of Bhadrásreṇya, and Śatrujit, from vanquishing all his foes: ततः प्रतर्दनः । स च भद्रश्रेष्ठवंशविनाशादशेषाः शश्वदोऽनेन जिता इति शत्रुजिदभवत् । By Vairasya anta, 'the end of hostility or enmity,' is, obviously, not to be understood, here, as M. Langlois has intimated, a friendly pacification, but the end or destruction of all enemies. In the 32nd chapter of the Hari Vaiśa, we have precisely the same lines, slightly varied as to their order; but they are preceded by this verse:*

भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पूर्वं तु पुरीं वाराणसीं भवात् ।
 यदुवंशप्रसूतस्य तपस्यभिरतस्य च ॥

"The city, (that on the Gomatī), before the existence of Benares, of Bhadrásreṇya, a pious prince of the Yadu race." This verse is not in the Brahma Purāṇa. After giving the rest of the above quotation, except the last line, the passage proceeds:†

 तेन पुत्रेषु बालेषु प्रहृतं तस्य भारत ।
 वैरस्यान्तं महाराज क्षत्रियेण विधित्सता ॥

calling him by that name; Ritadhwaja, 'he whose emblem was truth,' being a great observer of veracity; and Kuvalayáśwa, because he had a horse (áswa) called Kuvalaya.¹ The son of this prince was Alarka, of whom this verse is sung, in the present day: "For sixty thousand and sixty hundred years, no other youthful monarch, except Alarka, reigned over the earth."^{2*}

"The king called Ashtáratha was the son of Bhímaratha; and by him, great king, a warrior desirous of destroying his foes, was (the country) recovered, the children (of Durdama) being infants." तस्य दुर्दमस्य पुत्रेषुसमर्थेषु । Commentary. According to the same authority, we are, here, to understand Bhímaratha and Ashtáratha as epithets of Divodása and Pratardana. From these scanty and ill-digested notices it appears, that Divodása, on being expelled from Benares, took some city and district on the Gomati from the family of Bhadrásreṇya; that Durdama recovered the country; and that Pratardana again conquered it from his descendants. The alternation concerned, apparently, only bordering districts; for the princes of Máhishmatí and of Káśí continue, in both an earlier and a later series, in undisturbed possession of their capitals and their power.

² The Váyu, Brahma, and Hari Vamśa repeat this stanza,‡ and add, that Alarka enjoyed such protracted existence, through the favour of Lopámudrá, and that, having lived till the period

The Hari Vaṁśa§ agrees, as usual, with the Brahma, except in the reading of one or two names. It is to be observed, however, that the Agni makes the Káśi princes the descendants of Vitatha, the successor of Bharata. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa, determined, apparently, to be right, give the list twice over; deriving it, in one place, from Kshattraviddha, as in our text, the Váyu, and the Bhágavata; and, in another, with the Agni, from Vitatha. The series of the Brahma, however, stops with Lauhi, the son of Alarka, and does not warrant the repetition which the carelessness of the compiler of the Hari Vaṁśa has superfluously inserted.

¹ Our text is clear enough; and so is the Bhágavata: but the Váyu, Brahma, and Hari Vaṁśa contain additions of rather doubtful import. The former|| has:

वेणुहोत्रसुतश्चापि गार्ग्यो वै नाम विश्रुतः ।

गार्ग्यस्य गर्गभूमिसु वत्सो वत्सस्य धीमतः ।

ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रियाश्चैव तयोः पुत्राः सुधार्मिकाः ॥

“The son of Veṇuhotra was the celebrated Gárgya; Gargabhúmi was the son of Gárgya; and Vatsa, of the wise Vatsa: virtuous Brahmans and Kshattriyas were the sons of these two.” By the second Vatsa is, perhaps, meant Vatsabhúmi; and the purport of the passage is, that Gárgya (or, possibly, rather, Bharga, one of the sons of Pratardana,) and Vatsa were the founders of two races (Bhúmi, 'earth', implying 'source' or 'founder'), who were Kshattriyas by birth, and Brahmans by profession. The Brahma† and Hari Vamśa, apparently misunderstanding this text, have increased the perplexity. According to them, the son of Veṇuhotra was Bharga; Vatsabhúmi was the son of Vatsa; and Bhargabhúmi (Bhṛigubhúmi: Brahma,) was from Bhārgava. "These sons of Angiras were born in the family of Bhṛigu, thousands of great might, Brahmans, Kshattriyas and Vaiśyas:"

the brother of Vatsa. (They were) Angirasas, from Gálava, belonging to that family, (and were born) in the family of Bhṛigu, clear; but it authorizes the notion above expressed, that Vatsa and Bharga, the sons of Pratardana, are the founders of two races of Kshattriya-Brahmans.

Sudeva, the son of Haryaśwa, was, also, attacked and defeated by the same enemies. Divodāsa, his son, built and fortified Benāres, as a defence against the Haihayas; but in vain; for they took it, and compelled him to fly. He sought refuge with Bharadvāja, by whose favour he had a son born to him, Prataṛdāna, who destroyed the Haihayas, under their king Vītahavya,§ and reestablished the kingdom of Kāśī. Vītahavya, through the protection of Bhṛigu, became a Brahman.|| The Mahābhārata gives a list of his descendants, which contains several of the names of the Kāśī dynasty of the text. Thus, Grītsamada is said to be his son; and the two last of the line are Śunaka and Śaunaka. Vide supra, p. 31, note 1.

CHAPTER IX.

Descendants of Raji, son of Áyus: Indra resigns his throne to him: claimed, after his death, by his sons, who apostatize from the religion of the Vedas, and are destroyed by Indra. Descendants of Pratikshattra, son of Kshattraviddha.

RAJI had five hundred sons, all of unequalled daring and vigour. Upon the occurrence of a war between the demons* and the gods, both parties inquired of Brahmá which would be victorious. The deity replied: "That for which Raji shall take up arms." Accordingly, the Daityas immediately repaired to Raji, to secure his alliance; which he promised them, if they would make him their Indra, after defeating the gods. To this they answered, and said: "We cannot profess one thing, and mean another. Our Indra is Prahláda;† and it is for him that we wage war." Having thus spoken, they departed. And the gods then came to him, on the like errand. He proposed to them the said conditions; and they agreed that he should be their Indra. Raji, therefore, joined the heavenly host, and, by his numerous and formidable weapons, destroyed the army of their enemies.

When the demons were discomfited, Indra placed the feet of Raji upon his head, and said: "Thou hast preserved me from a great danger; and I acknowledge thee as my father.‡ Thou art the sovereign chief over all the regions; and I, the Indra of the three spheres, am thy son." The Raja smiled, and said, "Even be it so. The regard that is conciliated by many agreeable speeches is not to be resisted even when such language proceeds from a foe: (much less should the kind words of a friend fail to win our affection)." * He, accordingly, returned to his own city; and Indra† remained (as his deputy,) in the government of heaven.

When Raji ascended to the skies, his sons, at the instigation of Nārada, demanded the rank of Indra, as their hereditary right; and, as the deity refused to acknowledge their supremacy, they reduced him to submission, by force, and usurped his station. After some considerable time had elapsed, the god of a hundred sacrifices, (Indra), deprived of his share of offerings to the immortals, met with Brīhaspati, in a retired place, and said to him: "Cannot you give me a little of the sacrificial butter,‡ even if it were no bigger than a jujube? For I am in want of sustenance." "If," replied Brīhaspati, "I had been applied to, by you, before, I could have done anything for you that you wished: as it is, I will endeavour and restore you, in a few days, to your sovereignty." So saying, he commenced a sacrifice,§ for the purpose of increasing the might of Indra, and of leading the sons of Rāji into error, (and so effecting their downfall).¹ Misled by their mental fascination, the princes became enemies of the Brahmins, regardless of their duties, and contemners of the precepts of the Vedas; and, thus devoid of morality and religion, they were slain by Indra, who, by the assistance of the priests (of the gods), resumed his place in heaven. ¹ The Bhágavata refers, briefly, to the story of Nahusha, which is told in the Mahábhárata more than once,—in the Vana Parvan, Udyoga Parvan, Dánadharmā Parvan, and others; also, in the Padma and other Purāṇas. He had obtained the rank of Indra; but, in his pride, or at the suggestion of Śachí, compelling the Ṛishis to bear his litter, he was cursed, by them, to fall from his state, and reappear, upon earth, as a serpent. From this form he was set free by philosophical discussions with Yudhishthira, and received final liberation. Much speculation, wholly unfounded, has been started by Wilford's conjecture, that the name of this prince, with Deva, 'divine', prefixed, a combination which never occurs, was the same as Dionysius, or Bacchus. || Authorities generally agree as to the names of the first three of his sons: in those of the others there is much variety; and the Matsya, Agni, and Padma have seven names, as follows, omitting the three first of the text:

* He, at least, of the sons of Nahusha, had Virajā for mother, according to the Vāyu-purāṇa and Harivaṁśa. See Vol. III., p. 164, notes § and ¶.

curse of Uśanas,* Yayāti became old and infirm before his time; but, having appeased his father-in-law,† he obtained permission to transfer his decrepitude to any one who would consent to take it. He first applied to his eldest son, Yadu, and said: “Your maternal grandfather has brought this premature decay upon me. By his permission, however, I may transfer it to you for a thousand years. Mahābhārata; also, in the Bhāgavata, with some additions, evidently of a recent taste. Śarmishthā, the daughter of Vṛishaparvan, king of the Daityas,‡ having quarrelled with Devayānī, the daughter of Śukra (the religious preceptor of the same race§), had her thrown into a well. Yayāti, hunting in the forest, found her, and, taking her to her father, with his consent, espoused her. Devayānī, in resentment of Śarmishthā’s treatment, demanded that she should become her handmaid; and Vṛishaparvan, afraid of Śukra’s displeasure, was compelled to comply. In the service of his queen, however, Yayāti beheld Śarmishthā, and secretly wedded her. Devayānī complaining to her father of Yayāti’s infidelity, Śukra inflicted on him premature decay, with permission to transfer it to any one willing to give him youth and strength in exchange, as is related in the text. The passage specifying the sons of Yayāti is precisely the same in the Mahābhārata|| as in our text, and is introduced in the same way: अचानुवंशस्त्रीकी भवति । means of your youth. Do not refuse compliance with my request." Yadu, however, was not willing to take upon him his father's decay; on which, his father denounced an imprecation upon him, and said: "Your posterity shall not possess dominion." He then applied, successively, to Druhyu, Turvasu, and Anu, and demanded of them their juvenile vigour. They all refused, and were, in consequence, cursed by the king.* Lastly, he made the same request of Śarmishthá's youngest son, Púru, who bowed to his father, and readily consented to give him his youth, and receive, in exchange, Yayáti's infirmities, saying that his father had conferred upon him a great favour.

The king Yayáti being, thus, endowed with renovated youth, conducted the affairs of state for the good of his people, enjoying such pleasures as were suited to his age and strength, and were not incompatible with virtue.† He formed a connexion with the celestial nymph Viśwáchí,‡ and was wholly attached to her, and conceived no end to his desires. The more they were gratified, the more ardent they became; as it is said in this verse:§ "Desire is not appeased by enjoyment: fire fed with sacrificial oil becomes but the more intense.|| No one has ever more than enough of rice, or barley, or gold, or cattle, or women. Abandon, therefore, inordinate desire. When a mind finds neither good nor ill in all objects, but looks on all with an equal eye, then everything yields it pleasure. The wise man is filled with happiness, who escapes from desire, which the feeble-minded can with difficulty relinquish, and which grows not old with the aged.* The hair becomes grey, the teeth fall out, as man advances in years; but the love of wealth, the love of life, are not impaired by age." "A thousand years have passed," reflected Yayāti, "and my mind is still devoted to pleasure: every day my desires are awakened by new objects. I will, therefore, now renounce all sensual enjoyment, and fix my mind upon spiritual truth. Unaffected by the alternatives of pleasure and pain, and having nothing I may call my own, I will, henceforth, roam the forests with the deer."†

Having made this determination, Yayāti restored his youth to Púru, resumed his own decrepitude, installed his youngest son in the sovereignty, and departed to the wood of penance (Tapovana¹). To Turvasu he consigned the south-east districts of his kingdom; the west, to Druhyu; the south, to Yadu; and

It has been speculated that “the Jartikas of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas represent the Jats,” and that the Jats “were * * transformed into the Jatano, or Gitano, the Gypsies of modern Europe.” Sir H. M. Elliot's Appendix to the Arabs in Sind, pp. 148, 67. very top of the valley of Sohagpoor, in Bhagel-khund, aware of their ancient lineage, and, though few in number, are still celebrated for their valour." Tod's Annals, &c. of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 39. The scope of the traditions regarding them—especially, of their overrunning the country, along with Śakas and other foreign tribes, in the reign preceding that of Sagara (see Vol. III., p. 289),—indicates their foreign origin, also; and, if we might trust to verbal resemblances, we might suspect, that the Hayas and Haihayas of the Hindus had some connexion with the Hia, Hoiei-ke, Hoiei-hu, and similarly denominated Hun or Turk tribes who make a figure in Chinese history.* Deguignes, Histoire Générale des Huns, Vol. I., Part I., pp. 7, 55, 231; Vol. I., Part II., pp. 253, &c. At the same time, it is to be observed, that these tribes do not make their appearance until some centuries after the Christian era, and the scene of their first exploits is far from the frontiers of India: the coincidence of appellation may be, therefore, merely accidental.† In the word Haya, which, properly, means 'a horse,' it is not impossible, however, that we have a confirmatory evidence of the Scythian origin of the Haihayas, as Colonel Tod supposed; although we cannot, with him, imagine the word 'horse' itself is derived from Haya.‡ Annals, &c. of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 76.

* Colonel Tod speculates that "The Hibia [Haihaya] race, of the line of Boodha, may claim affinity with the Chinese race which first gave monarchs to China." Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan, Vol. I., p. 39, note †.

On one occasion, the king, after a desperate conflict, with elephants and horse, defeated a powerful foe, who, abandoning wife, children, kin, army, treasure, and dominion, fled. When the enemy was put to flight, Jyámagha beheld a lovely princess left alone and exclaiming "Save me, father! Save me, brother!" as her (large) eyes rolled wildly with affright. The king was struck by her beauty, and penetrated with affection for her, and said to himself: "This is fortunate. I have no children, and am the husband of a sterile bride. of the queen in these nuptials." Accordingly, he took the princess into his chariot, and returned to his own capital.

When Jyámagha's approach was announced, Śaibyá came to the palace-gate, attended by the ministers, the courtiers, and the citizens, to welcome the victorious monarch. But, when she beheld the maiden standing on the left hand of* the king, her lips swelled and slightly quivered with resentment, and she said to Jyámagha: "Who is this light-hearted damsel that is with you in the chariot?" The king, unprepared with a reply, made answer precipitately, through fear of his queen: "This is my daughter-in-law." "I have never had a son," rejoined Śaibyá; "and you have no other children. Of what son of yours, then, is this girl the wife?"† The king, disconcerted by the jealousy and anger which the words of Śaibyá displayed, made this reply to her, in order to prevent further contention: "She is the young bride of the future son whom thou shalt bring forth." Hearing this, Śaibyá smiled gently, and said "So be it;" and the king entered into his great palace.

The Sun presented it to him, and then resumed his place in the sky. Having obtained the spotless gem of gems, Sattrájita wore it on his neck; and, becoming as brilliant, thereby, as the Sun himself, irradiating all the regions with his splendour, he returned to Dwaraká. The inhabitants of that city, beholding him approach, repaired to the eternal male, Purushottama,—who, to sustain the burthen of the earth, had assumed a mortal form (as Kṛishná),—and said to him: "Lord, assuredly the (divine) Sun is coming to visit you." gone to his house, there deposited the jewel, which yielded, daily, eight loads* of gold, and, through its marvellous virtue, dispelled all fear of portents, wild beasts, fire, robbers, and famine.†

Achyuta was of opinion‡ that this wonderful gem should be in the possession of Ugrasena;§ but, although he had the power of taking it from Sattrājita, he did not deprive him of it, that he might not occasion any disagreement amongst the family. Sattrājita, on the other hand, fearing that Kṛishṇa|| would ask him for the jewel, transferred it to his brother Prasena. Now, it was the peculiar property of this jewel, that, although it was an inexhaustible source of good to a virtuous person, yet, when worn by a man of bad character, it was the cause of his death. Prasena, having taken the gem and hung it round his neck, mounted his horse, and went to the woods to hunt. In the chase, he was killed¶ by a lion. The lion, taking the jewel in his mouth, was about to depart, when he was observed and killed by Jāmbavat, the king of the bears, who, carrying off the gem, retired into his cave, and gave it to his son Sukumāraka to play with.

When some time had elapsed, and Prasena did not appear, the Yádavas* began to whisper, one to another, and to say:† “This is Kṛishná’s doing. Desirous of the jewel, and not obtaining it, he has perpetrated the murder of Prasena, in order to get it into his possession.”

When these calumnious rumours came to the knowledge of Kṛishná,‡ he collected a number of the Yádavas, and, accompanied by them, pursued the course of Prasena by the impressions of his horse’s hoofs.§ Ascertaining, by this means, that he and his horse had been killed by a lion, he was acquitted, by all the people, of any share in his death. Desirous of recovering the gem, he thence followed the steps of the lion, and, at no great distance, came to the place where the lion had been killed by the bear. Following the footmarks of the latter, he arrived at the foot of a mountain, where he desired the Yádavas to await him, whilst he continued the track. Still guided by the marks of the feet, he discovered a cavern, and had scarcely entered it, when he heard the nurse of Suku-máraka saying to him: “The lion killed Prasena; the lion has been killed by Jám-bavat. Weep not, Suku-máraka. The Syamantaka is your own.” Thus assured of his object,|| Kṛishná advanced into the cavern, and saw the brilliant jewel in the hands of the nurse, who was giving it, as a plaything, to Sukumāraka. The nurse soon descried his approach, and, marking his eyes fixed upon the gem with eager desire, called loudly for help. Hearing her cries, Jāmbavat, full of anger, came to the cave; and a conflict ensued between him and Achyuta, which lasted twenty-one days. The Yādavas who had accompanied the latter waited seven or eight days, in expectation of his return; but, as the foe of Madhu still came not forth, they concluded that he must have met his death in the cavern. "It could not have required so many days," they thought, "to overcome an enemy;" and, accordingly, they departed, and returned to Dwāraká, and announced that Kṛishná had been killed.

When the relations of Achyuta heard this intelligence, they performed all the obsequial rites suited to the occasion. The food and water thus offered to Kṛishná, in the celebration of his Śráddha, served to support his life and invigorate his strength in the combat in which he was engaged; whilst his adversary, wearied by daily conflict with a powerful foe, bruised and battered, in every limb, by heavy blows, and enfeebled by want of food, became unable longer to resist him. Overcome by his mighty antagonist, Jāmbavat cast himself before him, and said: "Thou, mighty being, art, surely, invincible by all the demons, and by the spirits of heaven, earth, or hell; much less art thou to be vanquished by mean and powerless creatures in a human shape, and, still less, by such as we are, who are born of brute origin.* Undoubtedly, thou art a portion of my sovereign lord, Náráyaṇa, the defender of the universe." Thus addressed by Jám-bavat, Kṛishṇa explained to him, fully, that he had descended to take upon himself the burthen of the earth, and kindly alleviated the bodily pain which the bear suffered from the fight, by touching him with his hand. Jám-bavat again prostrated himself before Kṛishṇa, and presented to him his daughter, Jám-bavatí, as an offering suitable to a guest.* He also delivered to his visitor the Syamantaka jewel. Although a gift from such an individual was not fit for his acceptance, yet Kṛishṇa† took the gem, for the purpose of clearing his reputation. He then returned, along with (his bride) Jám-bavatí, to Dwáraká.

When the people of Dwáraká beheld Kṛishṇa alive and returned, they were filled with delight, so that those who were bowed down with years recovered youthful vigour; and all the Yádavas, men and women, assembled round Ánakadundubhi, (the father of the hero), and congratulated him. Kṛishṇa‡ related to the whole assembly of the Yádavas all that had happened, exactly as it had befallen, and, restoring the Syamantaka jewel to Sattrájita, was exonerated from the crime of which he had been falsely accused. He then led Jám-bavatí into the inner apartments.

When Sattrájita reflected that he had been the cause of the aspersions upon Kṛishṇa's character, he felt alarmed; and, to conciliate the prince, he gave him to wife his daughter, Satyabhāmā. The maiden had been, previously, sought in marriage by several of the most distinguished Yādavas, as Akrūra, Kṛitavarman, and Śatadhanwan,* who were highly incensed at her being wedded to another, and leagued in enmity against Sattrājita. The chief amongst them, with Akrūra and Kṛitavarman, said to Śatadhanwan:† "This caitiff Sattrājita has offered a gross insult to you, as well as to us, who solicited his daughter, by giving her to Kṛishṇa. Let him not live. Why do you not kill him, and take the jewel? Should Achyuta therefore enter into feud with you, we will take your part." Upon this promise, Śatadhanwan undertook to slay Sattrājita.‡

mosity of Duryodhana, and to perform the duties his relationship required. Śatadhanwan, taking advantage of his absence, killed Sattrājita in his sleep, and took possession of the gem. Upon this coming to the knowledge of Satyabhámá, she immediately mounted her chariot, and, filled with fury at her father's murder, repaired to Váraṇávata, and told her husband how Sattrājita had been killed by Śatadhanwan, in resentment of her having been married to another, and how he had carried off the jewel; and she implored him to take prompt measures to avenge such heinous wrong. Kṛishṇa, who is ever internally placid, being informed of these transactions, said to Satyabhámá, as his eyes flashed with indignation: "These are, indeed, audacious injuries: but I will not submit to them from so vile a wretch.* They must assail the tree, who would kill the birds that there have built their nests.† Dismiss excessive sorrow: it needs not your lamentations to excite any wrath."‡ Returning, forthwith, to Dwáraká, Kṛishṇa§ took Baladeva apart, and said to him: "A lion slew Prasena, hunting in the forests; and now Sattrājita has been murdered by Śatadhanwan. As both these are removed, the jewel which belonged to them is our common right. Up, then; ascend your car; and put Śatadhanwan to death!"

Being thus excited by his brother, Balaráma engaged resolutely in the enterprise. But Śatadhanwan, being aware of their hostile designs, repaired to Kṛitavarman, and required his assistance. Kṛitavarman, however, declined to assist him; pleading his inability to engage in a conflict with both Baladeva and Kṛishṇa.* Śatadhanwan, thus disappointed, applied to Akrūra. But he said: "You must have recourse to some other protector. How should I be able to defend you? There is no one, even amongst the immortals,—whose praises are celebrated throughout the universe,—who is capable of contending with the wielder of the discus; at the stamp of whose foot the three worlds tremble; whose hand makes the wives of the Asuras widows; whose weapons no host, however mighty, can resist. No one is capable of encountering the wielder of the ploughshare, who annihilates the prowess of his enemies by the glances of his eyes, that roll with the joys of wine; and whose vast ploughshare manifests his might, by seizing and exterminating the most formidable foes."† "Since this is the case," replied Śatadhanwan,‡ "and you are unable to assist me, at least accept and take care of this jewel." "I will do so," answered Akrūra, "if you promise, that, even in the last extremity, you will not divulge its being in my possession." To this Śatadhanwan agreed; and Akrūra took the jewel. And the former, mounting a very swift mare,—one that could travel a hundred leagues a day,—fled (from Dwārakā).

* Here again the original has Vāsudeva; and so frequently below.

† Akrūra's speech is rendered very freely. Kṛishṇa and Baladeva are eulogized, in it, under the names, respectively, of Chakrin and Sirin.

‡ Śatadhanus is the name, in the original, here and several times below.

When Kṛishṇa heard of Śatadhanwan's flight, he harnessed his four horses,—Śaibya, Sugrīva, Megha-pushpa, and Baláhaka,—to his car, and, accompanied by Balaráma,* set off in pursuit. The mare (held her speed, and) accomplished her hundred leagues; but, when she reached the country of Mithilá, (her strength was exhausted, and) she (dropped down and) died. Śatadhanwan,¹ dismounting, continued his flight on foot, (When his pursuers came to the place where the mare had perished,) Kṛishṇa said to Balaráma:† “Do you remain in the car, whilst I follow the villain on foot, and put him to death. The ground here is bad; and the horses will not be able to drag the chariot across it.” Balaráma, accordingly, stayed with the car; and Kṛishṇa followed Śatadhanwan on foot. When he had chased him for two kos, he discharged his discus; and, although Śatadhanwan was at a considerable distance, the weapon struck off his head. Kṛishṇa, then coming up, searched his body and his dress for the Syamantaka jewel, but found it not. He then returned to Balabhadra, and told him that they had effected the death of Śatadhanwan to no purpose; for the precious gem, the quintessence of all worlds, was not upon his person. When Balabhadra heard this, he flew into a violent rage, and said to Vāsudeva: “Shame light upon you, to be thus greedy of wealth! I acknowledge no

It is of no use to seek to impose upon me with thy perjuries."* Thus reviling his brother, who fruitlessly endeavoured to appease him, Balabhadra went to the city of Videha,† where Janaka¹ received him hospitably; and there he remained. Vásudeva returned to Dwáraká. It was during his stay in the dwelling of Janaka, that Duryodhana, the son of Dhṛitaráshtra, learned from Balabhadra the art of fighting with the mace. At the expiration of three years, Ugrasena and other chiefs of the Yádavas,‡ being satisfied that Kṛishná had not the jewel, went to Videha,§ and removed Balabhadra's|| suspicions, and brought him home.

‡ "When, after escaping the tremendous catastrophe of the Deluge, the ark rested on Mount Jūd, and the great patriarch, either by the direct inspiration of the Divine Being, or from the impulse of his own discretion, proceeded to allot to his children the different quarters of the earth, he assigned to Yapheth the countries of the north and east. And we are further informed, that, when the latter was about to depart for the regions allotted to him, he requested that his father would instruct him in some form of prayer, or invocation, that should, whenever he required it, procure for his people the blessing of rain. In compliance with this request, Noah imparted to his son one of the mysterious names of God, inscribing it on a stone; which, as an everlasting memorial, he delivered, at the same time, into his possession. Yapheth now proceeded, with the whole of his family, to the north-east, according to appointment; devoting himself, as is the manner of those who inhabit the boundless plains in that quarter, to a wandering and pastoral life; and, having instituted, for his followers, the most just and virtuous regulations for their conduct, never failed to procure for them, through the influence of the sacred deposit consigned to him by his father, rain and moisture for their lands, whenever occasion made it necessary. This stone has been denominated, by the Arabs, the Hidjer-ul-mattyr, lapis imbifer, or rain-stone; by the Persians, Sang-yeddah, aid-stone, or stone of power; and, by the Turks, Jeddah-taush. And it is affirmed, that the same stone was preserved among the Moghúls and Ouzbeks, possessing the same mysterious property, to the days of the author, in the beginning of the sixteenth century." From the moment of his departure, various calamities, portents, snakes, dearth,* plague,† and the like began to prevail; so that he whose emblem is Garuḍa‡ called together the Yádavas, with Balabhadra and Ugrasena, and recommended them to consider how it was that so many prodigies should have occurred at the same time. On this, Andhaka, one of the elders of the Yadu race, thus spake: “Wherever Śwaphalka,§ the father of Akrúra, dwelt, there famine, plague, dearth, and other visitations were unknown. Once, when there was want of rain in the kingdom of Káśirája,|| Śwaphalka was brought there, and immediately there fell rain from the heavens.¶ It happened, also, that the queen of Káśirája conceived, and was quick with a daughter; but, when the time of delivery arrived, the child issued not from the womb. Twelve years passed away, and still the girl was unborn. Then Káśirája spake to the child, and said: ‘Daughter, why is your birth thus delayed? Come forth. I desire to behold you. Why do you inflict this protracted suffering upon your mother?’ Thus addressed, the infant answered: ‘If, father, you will present a cow, every day, to the Brahmans, I shall, at the end of three years more, be born.’ The king, accordingly, presented, daily, a cow to the Brahmans; and, at the end of three years, the damsel came into Agreeably to the advice of Andhaka the elder,|| the Yádas sent a mission, headed by Keśava, Ugrasena, and Balabhadra, to assure Akrúra¶ that no notice would be taken of any irregularity committed by him; and, having satisfied him that he was in no danger, they brought him back to Dwáraká. "Of a surety", said he to himself, "the great Syamantaka jewel is in his keeping; for such, I have heard, are amongst its properties. This Akrúra, too, has been lately celebrating sacrifice after sacrifice: his own means are insufficient for such expenses: it is beyond a doubt, that he has the jewel." Having come to this conclusion, he called a meeting of all the Yá-davas at his house, under the pretext of some festive celebration.* When they were all seated, and the purport of their assembling had been explained, and the business accomplished, Kṛishná† entered into conversation with Akrúra, and, after laughing and joking, said to him: "Kinsman, you are a very prince in your liberality; but we know very well, that the precious jewel which was stolen by Śatadhanwan‡ was delivered, by him, to you, and is now in your possession, to the great benefit of this kingdom.§ So let it remain.

I cannot submit to a search.” So reflecting, Akrúra said to Náráyaṇa, the cause of the whole world: “It is true that the Syamantaka jewel was entrusted to ease. Afraid that you would think me unfit to retain possession of a jewel so essential to the welfare of the kingdom, I forbore to mention to you its being in my hands. But now take it, yourself, and give the care of it to whom you please.” Having thus spoken, Akrúra drew forth, from his garments, a small gold box,‡ and as his property jointly with Achyuta, as formerly agreed upon;* whilst Satyabhámá demanded it, as her

CHAPTER XIV.

Descendants of Śini, of Anamitra, of Śwaphalka and Chitraka, of Andhaka. The children of Devaka and Ugrasena. The descendants of Bhajamāna. Children of Śūra: his son Vasudevā: his daughter Prīthā married to Pāṇdu: her children, Yudhishthira and his brothers; also Karna, by Aditya. The sons of Pāṇdu by Mādrī. Husbands and children of Śūra's other daughters. Previous births of Śiśupāla.

THE younger brother* of Anamitra† was Śini;‡ his son was Satyaka; his son was Yuyudhāna, also known by the name of Sātyaki; his son was Asanga;§ his son was Tūni;¹|| his son was Yugandhara.² These princes were termed Śaineyas.¶

² The Agni makes these, all, brother's sons of Satyaka, and adds another, Rishabha, the father of Śwaphalka.

* 'Son', according to two MSS. † Vide supra, p. 73.

‡ This Śini, according to the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIV., 13, was son of Anamitra. The same work, in the stanza immediately preceding that just referred to, recognizes the Śini of our text,—a brother of Anamitra.

The Kūrma-p., also,—vide supra, p. 74, note *,—speaks of two Śinis:

अनमित्राच्छिनिर्जज्ञे कनिष्ठो वृष्णिनन्दिनात् ।

Here, Śini is youngest son of Anamitra, son of Vṛishnī.

From this the Vāyu-purāṇa differs slightly:

अनमित्राच्छिनिर्जज्ञे कनिष्ठावृष्णिनन्दिनात् ।

According to this, Śini was son of Anamitra, youngest son of Vṛishnī. The Linga-purāṇa, Prior Section, LXIX., 15, knows only one Śini, the youngest son of Vṛishnī. (?)

§ Variants: Sanga, Sanjaya, and Asima. Jaya: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

|| Kuṇi, in one MS.; Śrīni, in another.

¶ The Vāyu-purāṇa calls them Bhautyas, as being descendants of Bhūti.

 And so in the Linga-purāṇa.

†† Bhūmi, in the Harivaṃśa, which here wants a stanza, in the Calcutta edition.

In the family of Anamitra, Pṛiśni* was born; his son was Śwaphalka,† the sanctity of whose character‡ has been described: the younger brother of Śwaphalka was named Chitraka.§ Śwaphalka had, by Gāndinī, besides Akrūra, Upamadgu,§ Mṛidura,|| Arime-

¹ The authorities are not agreed here. Śwaphalka, ¶ according to the Agni, as just remarked, comes from Śini, the son of Anamitra. The Bhāgavata, instead of Pṛiśni, has Vṛishnī, son of Anamitra, the Brahma†† and Hari Vamśa‡‡ have Vṛishnī; and the Agni, Pṛishnī, son of Yudhājita.§§ The Matsya also makes Yudhājita the ancestor of Akrūra, through Ṛishabha and Jayanta. Yudhājita, in the Brahma, &c., is the son of Kroshtri. |||

* Vṛishnī, in four MSS. † "Sanctity of character" is for prabhāva.
‡ Chitraratha: Bhāgavata-purāṇa. According to the Linga-purāṇa, Chitraka was son of Sumitra.

§ Two MSS. give Upamangu, as in, for instance, the Vāyu-purāṇa; which then has Mangu, as has the Brahma-purāṇa.

Several of the notes that follow should be compared together, and with note ¶ in p. 96, infra.

|| Also read Mṛidara and Mṛidu. The Brahma-purāṇa has Madura.

¶ According to the Linga-purāṇa, Śwaphalka was son of Yudhājita, son of a son of Mādri. This unnamed son, the commentator says, was Devamīdhusha; and he explains the term Vārshnī, applied to Śwaphalka, as signifying "founder of the Vṛishnī family". The text is as follows:

माद्र्याः सुतस्य संजज्ञे सुतो वार्ष्णिर्गुधाजितः ।

श्वफल्क इति विख्यातस्त्रिलोक्यहितकारकः ॥

Comment: माद्र्याः सुतस्य देवमीधुषसंज्ञकप्रथमपुत्रस्य गुधाजितः सुतः । वार्ष्णिर्गुणिकुलोद्भवः । श्वफल्क इति विख्यातः संजज्ञे इत्यन्वयः ।

 Vṛishnī was Anamitra's third son, according to the Purāṇa referred to: IX., XXIV., 14.

†† My MS. gives Pṛishnī, son of Yudhājita.

‡‡ Ś. 1908.

§§ The Vāyu-purāṇa has:

माद्र्याः सुतस्य जज्ञे तु सुतः पृश्निर्गुधाजितः ।

Compare the first verse of the stanza quoted in note ¶, above; and see the Harivamśa, ś. 2080.

mardana,§ Dharmadhṛik,|| Dṛiṣṭāsarman,¶ Gandhamocha, Avāha, and Prativāha.¹†† He had, also, a daughter, Sutarā.‡‡

¹ The different authorities vary in the reading of these names,

* Professor Wilson had “Śāramejaya”; his Hindu-made English version, “Ravi, Śārinjaya,” preceded by “Mṛida”. The original, -मृदुरविशारिमेजयः, might be resolved into “Mṛidu, Raviśa, Arimejaya”: but that this is corrupt appears from the high authority of the Vāyu-purāṇa, which reads:

उपमङ्गुस्तथा मङ्गुमृदुरश्चारिमेजयः ।

† These names are written, in the original, as one long compound; and it is more likely than not that we should here read “Kṣhattra, Upakṣhattra”. Professor Wilson’s Bengal translation has “Girikshetra, Upakshetra”. One MS. gives Kṣhattropeta. The Vāyu-purāṇa gives, plainly, Girirakshas and Yaksha.

‡ Śatruhan: Brahma-purāṇa.

§ Three MSS. have Avimardana. The Vāyu-purāṇa seems to give Pārimardana.

|| Dharmabhṛit: Vāyu-purāṇa and Brahma-purāṇa.

¶ Corrected from “Dhrisṭasarmān”. One MS. has Dṛisṭadharmā.

 Professor Wilson had, instead of two names, “Gandhamojavāha”; and all my MSS. but one—which has Gandhamohavāha,—might be read to yield Gandhamojavāha. There is little risk in the alteration which I have ventured; as the Vāyu-purāṇa has

* * * * * गन्धमोचस्तथापरः ।

आवाहप्रतिवाही च वसुदेवा वराङ्गना ॥

†† In the Brahma-purāṇa there are, hereabouts, in my single MS., many partly undecipherable, and yet indubitable, variations from the Vishṇu-purāṇa. The Harivāṇṣa adds to our Purāṇa, with reference to the chapter under annotation, not a few particulars which it has seemed scarcely worth while to swell the notes by transcribing, particularly as that work is so easily accessible.

‡‡ The Vāyu-purāṇa calls her Vasudevā. See the Sanskrit quotation in note , above. In the Linga-purāṇa, her name is Sudhārā, according to my MSS.; in the Harivāṇṣa, Sundarī.

Devavat and Upadeva* were the sons of Akrūra.† The sons of Chitraka‡ were Pṛithu and Vipṛithu,§ and many others.¹ Andhaka|| had four sons, Ku-though they generally concur in the number. ¶

¹ The Matsya and Padma call them sons of Akrūra, but, no doubt, incorrectly.

* Instead of these two names, one MS. has Deva and Anupadeva, as has Professor Wilson's Bengal translation. The Brahma-purāṇa gives Vastudeva and Upadeva; the Harivaṃśa, Prasena and Upadeva.

† His wife, according to the Linga-purāṇa, Brahma-purāṇa, and Harivaṃśa, is Ugraseni.

‡ Corrected from "Chitrika".

§ Corrected from "Vipritha". Vidūṛatha: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

|| The Vāyu-purāṇa has Satyaka.

¶ The Linga-purāṇa has, in my MSS.: Akrūra, Upamangu, Mangu, Vṛita, Janamejaya, Girirakshas, Upaksha, Śatrughna, Arimardana, Dharmabhṛit, Vṛishṭadharmā, Godhana, Vara, Áváha, and Prativáha. The Harivaṃśa, śl. 1916—1918, has, in my best MSS.: Akrūra, Upamangu, Mangu, Mṛidara, Arimejaya, Arikshipa, Upeksha, Śatrughna, Arimardana, Dharmadhṛik, Yatidharman, Gṛidhramojāndhaka, Áváha, Prativáha. In śl. 2083—2085, we find Madura for Mṛidara, Girikshipa for Arikshipa, Ákshepa for Upeksha, Śatruhan for Śatrughna, Dharmabhṛit for Dharmadhṛik, and Dharmin for Yatidharman. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa has: Akrūra, Ásanga, Sárameya, Mṛidura, Mṛiduvid (or Mṛiduri), Giri, Dharmaviddha, Sukarman, Kshetroppeksha, Arimardana, Śatrughna, Gandhamáda, Pratibáhu. The Brahma-purāṇa has, with other names, Arimejaya, Áváha, and Prativáha. The readings of the Vāyu-purāṇa, scattered through the preceding notes, are especially deserving of attention.

There is little doubt, that, of all the Purāṇas, the Vāyu-purāṇa generally presents, in their oldest extant Paurāṇik form, the particulars that make up the works of the class to which it belongs.

 In the Vāyu-purāṇa they are called Pṛithu, Vipṛithu, Áśwagriva, Áśwabáhu, Supáṛśwaka, Gaveshaṇa, Arishtanemi, Áśwa, Suvarman, Dharmabhṛit, Abhūmi, and Bahubhūmi. In the Linga-purāṇa we read: Vipṛithu, Pṛithu, Áśwagriva, Subáhu, Sudhásūka, Gaveshaṇa, Arishtanemi, Áśwa, Dharma, Dharmabhṛit, Subhūmi, and Bahubhūmi. Much the same persons are named in the Brahma-purāṇa, where they are called sons of Sumitra. The list slightly differs, again, in the Harivaṃśa, śl. 1920, 1921; 2087—2089.

The Bhāgavata and Brahma agree with the text, which is, probably, correct. The Brahma has Śūra, son of Devamīdhusha;§§ although it does not specify the latter amongst the sons of Hṛidika.

* In one MS., Devārhaṇa, and with Devamīdha just below: the latter is the name in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa. Another MS. has Devamīdha, and then Devamīdhaka.

† In the Vāyu-purāṇa we read, according to my MSS.:

It is, thus, stated, that Devamīdhusha was son of Śūra and Māshi. This Śūra seems to be the one named a little above.

By Āsmakī, Śura had Devamīdhushā, it is stated just before the line quoted.

"Pṛithā avait reçu de Durvāsas satisfait un charme capable de faire apparaître les Dieux à sa voix; un jour Pṛithā voulant essayer la force de ce charme, appela le brillant soleil.

"Le Dieu lui apparut aussitôt; mais frappée d'étonnement à sa vue, Pṛithā lui dit: C'est uniquement pour essayer ce charme que je t'ai appelé, ô Dieu; va, et pardonne-moi ma curiosité.

"Ma présence ne peut être stérile, ô femme; c'est pourquoi je désire te rendre mère; mais je ferai en sorte, ô belle fille, que ta virginité n'en souffre pas.

"Ayant ainsi parlé, le Dieu du soleil eut commerce avec Pṛithā; et après l'avoir rendue mère, il remonta au ciel; la jeune fille mit aussitôt au monde un enfant mâle qui resplendissait comme un second soleil.

But, from the circumstance of his thoughts being constantly engrossed by the supreme being, Śi-śupála was united with him, after death:* for the lord giveth to those to whom he is favourable whatever they desire; and he bestows a heavenly and exalted station even upon those whom he slays in his displeasure.

CHAPTER XV.

Explanation of the reason why Śiśupála, in his previous births as Hirañyakaśipu and Rávaṇa, was not identified with Vishṇu, on being slain by him, and was so identified, when killed as Śiśupála. The wives of Vasudeva: his children: Balaráma and Kṛishná his sons by Devakí: born, apparently, of Rohiṇí and Yaśodá. The wives and children of Kṛishná. Multitude of the descendants of Yadu.

MAITREYA.—Most eminent of all who cultivate piety, I am curious to hear from you, and you are able to explain to me, how it happened, that the same being who, when killed, by Vishṇu, as Hirañyakaśipu and Rávaṇa, obtained enjoyments which, though scarcely attainable by the immortals, were but temporary, should have been absorbed into the eternal Hari, when slain, by him, in the person of Śiśupála.*

PARÁŚARA.—When the divine author of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the universe accomplished the death of Hirañyakaśipu, he assumed a body composed of the figures of a lion and a man;† so that Hirañyakaśipu was not aware that his destroyer was Vishnú. Although, therefore, the quality of purity, derived from exceeding merit, had been attained, yet his mind was perplexed by the predominance of the property of passion; and the consequence of that intermixture was, that he reaped, as the result of his death by the hands of Vishnú, only unlimited power and enjoyment upon earth, as Daśánana,* the sovereign of the three spheres: he did not obtain absorption into the supreme spirit,† that is without beginning or end, because his mind was not wholly dedicated to that sole object. So, also, Daśánana, being entirely subject to the passion of love,‡ and engrossed completely by the thoughts of Jánakí, could not comprehend that the son of Daśaratha§ whom he beheld was, in reality, (the divine) Achyuta. At the moment of his death, he was impressed with the notion, that his adversary was a mortal; and, therefore, the fruit he derived from being slain by Vishnú was confined to his birth in the illustrious family of the kings of Chedi, and the exercise of extensive dominion. In this situation, many circumstances brought the names of Vishnú to his notice: and, on all these occasions, the enmity that had accumulated through successive births influenced his mind; and, in speaking constantly with disrespect of Achyuta, he was ever repeating his different appellations. Whether walking, eating, sitting, or sleeping, his animosity was never at rest; and Kṛishná was ever present to his thoughts, in his ordinary semblance, having eyes as beautiful as the leaf of the lotos, clad in bright yellow raiment, decorated with a garland, with bracelets on his arms and wrists, and a diadem on his head; having four robust arms, bearing the conch, the discus, the mace, and the lotos. Thus uttering his names, even though in malediction, and dwelling upon his image, though in enmity, he beheld Kṛishṇa, when inflicting his death, radiant with resplendent weapons, bright with ineffable splendour in his own essence as the supreme being; and all his passion and hatred ceased, and he was purified from every defect. Being killed by the discus of Vishṇu, at the instant he thus meditated, all his sins were consumed by his divine adversary, and he was blended with him by whose might he had been slain. I have, thus, replied to your inquiries. He by whom the divine Vishṇu is named, or called to recollection, even in enmity, obtains a reward that is difficult of attainment to the demons and the gods. How much greater shall be his recompense, who glorifies the deity in fervour and in faith!*

Vasudeva, also called Ānakadundubhi, had Pauravī,¹

¹ Pauravī is, rather, a title attached to a second Rohiṇī, to distinguish her from the first, the mother of Balarāma.† She is also said, by the Vāyu,‡ to be the daughter of Bāhlika.

* The whole of this paragraph is very freely rendered.

† The commentator says: पौरवी । पुरवैशोद्धवेति रोहिण्या विशेष्णम् । अत एव पौरव्या न पृथग्वंशकीर्त्तनम् ।

‡ The MSS. at present accessible to me state:

According to this, Pauraví was daughter of Válṁika.

In my copies of the Linga-purāṇa, however, Pauraví is called daughter of Báhlika. Some MSS. of the Harivaṁśa here have Báhlika; others, Báhlika.

* More than half my copies have Sáraṇa.

† So read, like Professor Wilson's Bengal translation, all my MSS. but one, which gives Śála. In the MS. which the Professor followed all but exclusively, I find the ङ of this name so written as to look exceedingly like रु. Hence his "Śaru", now corrected.

‡ The Bhāgavata-purāṇa names Bala, Gada, Sáraṇa, Durmada, Vipula, Dhruva, and Kṛita.

§ In two copies, Baladeva. || One MS. gives Nishadha.

¶ Altered from "Márshṭi, Márshṭimat", a reading which I find in only a single MS., and that not a good one. The variants of these names are numerous, but of no appreciable importance.

 In one MS. I find Satya and Dhṛiti.

†† Instead of these two names, one of my MS. has Damabhúta; another, Madabhúta.

‡‡ The commentator says that the others are Piṇḍáraka and Uśinara.

§§ My best and oldest MSS. unaccompanied by the commentary yield Pauraví, on which reading the scholiast remarks: पौरव्या इति पाठेऽपि रोहिणी नाम्ना इत्यर्थः। एतेषामेव रोरिष्यास्तनया दशेति हरिवंशे ग्रहणात्कुलजा वंशाः।

||| According to all my MSS., Pura. See note † in the preceding page.

¶¶ In addition to these, the Bhāgavata-purāṇa mentions Śúra, and speaks of others unnamed.

 According to the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, Kauśalyá—whom the commentator identifies with Bhadrá,—had but one son, Keśin.

Upanidhi, Gada,* and others. By his wife Vaiśālī,† he had one son, named Kauśika. Devakī bore him six sons,‡ — Kīrttimat, Susheṇa,§ Udāyin,|| Bhadrāsena, Rijudāsa,¶ and Bhadradeha; all of whom Kāṁsa put to death.¹

* For two Gadas in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, see note ‡ in the preceding page, and note || in the page following.

† Variants: Vaiśālī and Kauśālī.

‡ The Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIV., 53, 54, names eight: Kīrttimat, Susheṇa, Bhadrāsena, Rijū, Saṁmardana, Bhadrā, Sankarshaṇa (lord of serpents), and Hari; with a daughter, Subhadrā. In commenting on the same Purāṇa, X., I., 8, Śrīdhara, according to my best MSS., substitutes Mīdu and Santardana for Rijū and Saṁmardana.

When Devakí was pregnant the seventh time, Yoganidrā (the sleep of devotion),* sent by Vishṇu, extricated the embryo from its maternal womb, at midnight, and transferred it to that of Rohiṇí; and, from having been thus taken away, the child (who was Balaráma,) received the name of Sankarshaṇa. Yoganidrā, proud to execute his orders, removed the embryo to Yaśodā, the wife of Nanda the cowherd. || Professor Wilson had "Jātaḥāsini", a misprint for Jālahāsini, the reading of all my copies but one. This one, my Ajmere MS., has Chāruhāsini, which is much more likely to be correct. In early medieval times, च and ज were hardly distinguishable, and there was something of resemblance between ज and ल. It is, therefore, very likely that Jālahāsini originated in a graphical corruption of Chāruhāsini.

¹ The wives and children of Kṛishná are more particularly described in the next book. The Brahma Purána and Hari Vanśa† add some details of the descendants of Vasudeva's brothers. Thus, Devabhága is said to be the father of Uddhava; Anádhṛishti,‡ of Devaśravas, a great scholar or Pandit. Devaśravas, another brother of Vasudeva, had Śatrughna and another son, called Ekalavya, who, for some cause being exposed when an infant, was found and brought up by the Nishádas, and was, thence, termed Nishádin. Vatsavat (Vatsabálaka§) and Gañdúsha being childless, Vasudeva gave his son Kauśika,|| to be adopted by the former; and Kṛishná gave Chárudeshná and three others to the latter. Kanavaka¶ (Karundhaka) had two sons,—Tandrija and Tandripála.†† Aváksṛinjima‡‡ (Śrinjaya) had, also, two,—Vira and Áswahanu. The gracious Śamika became as the son (although the brother) of Śyáma,§§ and, disdaining the joint rule which the princes of the house of Bhoja exercised, made himself paramount. Yudhishtira was his friend. The extravagant numbers of the Yádavas merely indicate that they were (as they undoubtedly were) a powerful and numerous tribe, of whom many traces exist in various parts of India.||||

* Professor Wilson had "Báhu"; but his Bengal translation and all my MSS. give as above.

In this manner the descendants of Yadu multiplied; and there were many hundreds of thousands of them, so that it would be impossible to repeat their names in hundreds of years. Two verses relating to them are current:* "The domestic instructors of the boys in the use of arms amounted to three crores and eighty† lacs (or thirty-eight millions‡). Who shall enumerate the whole of the mighty men of the Yádava race, who were tens of ten thousands and hundreds of hundred thousands in number?"§ Those powerful Daityas|| who were killed in the conflicts between them and the gods were born again, (upon earth,) as men, as tyrants and oppressors; and, in order to check their violence, the gods, also, descended to the world of mortals, and became members of the hundred and one branches of the family of Yadu.¶

Vishnú was, to them, a teacher and a ruler; and all the Yádavas were obedient to his commands.

Whoever listens frequently to this account of the origin of the heroes of the race of Vrishní shall be purified from all sin, and obtain the sphere of Vishnú.

CHAPTER XVI.

Descendants of Turvasu.

PARÁŚARA.—I shall now summarily give you an account of the descendants of Turvasu.*

The son of Turvasu was Vahni;¹ his son was Gobhānu;² his son was Traisāmba;³ his son was Karandhama;† his son was Marutta. Marutta had no children; and he, therefore, adopted Dushyanta,‡ of the family of Pūru;§ by which the line of Turvasu

² Bhānumat: Bhāgavata,|| which also inserts Bhaga before him.

³ Tribhānu: Vāyu.¶ Trisānu: Brahma. Traisāli: Agni. Trisāri: Matsya.

* I find a variant, Turvaśu,—a temper between the Vaidik Turvaśa and the ordinary Paurāṇik form. For the personage in question, see p. 46 of this volume. Three of my MSS. yield Yadu, instead of Turvasu.

† My Arrah MS. gives Turvasu, Vahni, Bhārgava, Bhānu, Traisānu, Karandhama; my Ajmere MS., Turvasu, Vahni, Bharga, Bhānu, Chitrahānu, Karandhama.

These two copies, preserved in remotely separate districts of India, contain only the text of the Vishṇu-purāṇa; and the peculiarities which they offer suggest that the commentator—whose readings Professor Wilson unhesitatingly follows,—may have taken very considerable liberties with the lections of manuscripts current in his day. For other peculiarities of the kind here adverted to, see Vol. III., p. 334, note ††; and p. 335, note †: also, p. 112, note ||, supra, and p. 125, note ‡, infra.

‡ One MS. has Dushmanta.

§ Paurava, for “of the family of Pūru”, here and just after.

|| I find there,—IX., XXIII., 16,—Vahni, Bharga, Bhānumat.

¶ I find Trisānu. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa, however, has Tribhānu.

 And the Harivahśa. From this point I am unable to verify the Translator’s references to the Brahma-purāṇa.

merged into that of Púru.¹ This took place in consequence of the malediction denounced (on his son) by Yayāti.²

¹ Besides Bharata,—who, as will be hereafter seen, was the son of Dushyanta,—the Váyu, Matsya, Agni, and Brahma Purāṇas enumerate several descendants in this line, for the purpose, evidently, of introducing, as the posterity of Turvasu, the nations of the south of India. The series is Varuttha, * (Kurúthhāma, † Brahma), Ándira ‡ (Ákrira, Brahma); whose sons are Pándya, Kariáta, Chola, Kerala. § The Hari Vanśa || adds Kola; and the Agni, very incorrectly, Gándhára.

² The curse alluded to is the failure of his line (Prajá-samuchcheda), denounced upon Turvasu, as the punishment of refusing to take his father's infirmities upon him (vide supra, p. 48). He was, also, sentenced to rule over savages and barbarians,—Mlechchhas, or people not Hindus. The Mahábhārata adds, that the Yavanas sprang from Turvasu. As sovereign of the south-east, ¶ he should be the ancestor of the people of Arracan, Ava, &c.; but the authorities cited in the preceding note refer the nations of the Peninsula to him, and, consequently, consider them as Mlechchhas. Manu also places the Dravidas (or Tamuls) amongst Mlechchhas;  and these and similar passages indicate a period prior to the introduction of Hinduism into the south of India.

* In the Váyu purāṇa I find Śarútha(?).

† The Harivamśa, in my best MSS., agrees with the Brahma-purāṇa.

‡ The Harivamśa has Ándira; the Váyu-purāṇa, Ádira (or Adira?).

§ The Váyu-purāṇa has Pándya, Kerala, Chola, and Kulpa (??).

Descendants of Druhyu.

THE son of Druhyu* was Babhru;† his son‡ was Setu;§ his son was Áradwat;¹ his son was Gándhára;²

² Of Gándhára it is said, in the Váyu, that it is a large country, named after him, and is famous for its breed of horses:

ख्यायते यस्य नाम्ना तु गान्धारविषयो महान् ।

गान्धारदेशजाश्चापि तुरगा वाजिनां वराः ॥

The Matsya reads the beginning of the second line, आरट्टदेशजा- स्तास्तु; showing that Áratía †† and Gándhára are much the same.

§ I have not met with this variant. One MS. has Arada.

¶ The Bhāgavata-purāṇa has Árabdha.

 Compare the Harivaṃśa, śl. 1839, 1840.

†† Professor Wilson has elsewhere identified the people of this country with the Aratri of Arrian. Their locality is indicated in the following lines from the Mahābhārata,—Karṇa-parvan, śl. 2055, 2056:

his son was Dharma;¹* his son was Dhṛita;²† his son was Duryáman;³‡ his son was Prachetas,§ who had a hundred sons; and they were the princes of the lawless Mlechchhas (or barbarians) of the north.⁴

³ Durdama: Vāyu and Bhāgavata. The Matsya, Brahma, and Agni insert a Vidupa (Dudula, †† or Vidula) before Prachetas.

⁴ So the Bhāgavata and Matsya. The Mahābhārata says, the descendants of Druhya are the Vaibhojas, a people unacquainted with the use of cars or beasts of burthen, and who travel on rafts: they have no kings.

The descendants of Anu, according to the Mahābhārata, were, all, Mlechchhas. The last-named work, || as well as the Vāyu and Matsya Purāṇas, have an absurd story of the circumstances of the birth of Dīrghatamas, who was the son of Ujāsi ¶ or Utathya, the elder brother of Bṛi-haspati by Mamatā, and of his begetting Anga and the rest. They agree in assigning descendants of all four castes to them; the Vāyu stating that Bali had पुचांश्चातुर्वर्ण्यकरान्;  and the Matsya ascribing it to a boon given by Brahmā to Bali: चतुरो नियतान्वर्णस्त्वं स्थापयेति, 'Do thou establish the four perpetual castes.' Of these, the Brahmans are known as Bāleyas; बालियाः ब्राह्मणाश्च वै. The Matsya calls Bali the son of Virochana, and आयुकल्पप्रमाणिकः, 'existing for a whole Kalpa;' identifying him, therefore,—only in a different period and form,—with the Bali of the Vāmana Avatāra. ††

As is stated in the proper place, I have the help of some extracts from a point in Chapter XXI.

‡ Lomapāda, in the Harivaṃśa.

§ Read: "his son was Chitraratha, also called Romapāda; his son was Daśaratha." So, at least, it is natural to render; the original being ततश्चित्ररथो रोमपादसंज्ञो यस्य पुत्रो दशरथो जज्ञे । But the Translator has the authority of the commentator.

In the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XXIII., 6—10, it is Chitraratha that is called Romapāda; he has only one son, Chaturanga; and there is no mention of any Daśaratha but the father of Śántā. With this compare the Harivaṃśa. || See Vol. III., p. 313.

Champá is everywhere recognized as the capital of Anga; and the translators of the Rāmāyaṇa were very wide of the truth, when they conjectured that it might be Angwa, or Ava.

² Bṛihaddarbha: Brahma. The Bhāgavata omits the two successors of Champa, and makes Bṛihadratha, Bṛihatkarman, and Bṛihadbhānu sons of Prithuláksha.

³ The Vāyu, Matsya, and Hari Vaṁśa make Vijaya the brother†† of Jayadratha. The Bhāgavata agrees with our text. ‡‡

* I find no Sanskrit for this. † Prithula is the reading of one MS.

‡ Two of my best MSS.—those from Arrah and Ajmere,—have Bhadraratha, father of Bṛihadratha, father of Bṛihatkarman; another has, instead of Haryanga, Harshaṇa, father of Bṛihadratha, father of Bṛihatkarman.

son was Dhṛitavrata; his son was Satyakarman;* his son was Adhiratha,¹ who found Karṇa† in a basket,‡ on the banks of the Ganges, where he had been exposed by his mother, Prīthā.§ The son of Karṇa was Vṛishasena.²|| These were the Anga kings. You shall next hear who were the descendants of Púru.

The mother of Vijaya, from her origin, was of the Sūta caste,—the genealogist and charioteer. Manu, X., 47. Her son was of the same caste; children taking the caste of the mother: consequently, the descendants of Vijaya, kings of Anga, were Sūtas. And this explains the contemptuous application of the term Sūta to Karṇa, the half-brother of the Pándus; for he, as will presently be mentioned, was adopted into the Anga family, and succeeded to the crown.

¹ Some variety prevails in the series of princes here; but this arises from not distinguishing the collateral lines,—the descendants of Jayadratha from those of Vijaya. The Váyu and Matsya give the latter as in our text; but they agree, also, with the Agni and Brahma,¶ in the successors of Jayadratha, as Dṛidharatha (or Bṛihadhratha) and Janamejaya (or Viśwajit). **

† “The half-brother of the Pándavas, by their mother Prīthā, who, before her marriage to Pándu, had borne Karṇa to Sūrya, the god of the sun. The affair was kept secret. The infant was exposed on the banks of the Jumna, where he was found, and brought up, as his own, by Adhiratha—the Sūta, or charioteer, of king Śúra,—and his wife Rádhá; whence Karṇa is called, also, a Sūta, and Rádheya, or son of Rádhá.” So runs one legend, in the words of Professor Wilson, in Professor Johnson’s Selections from the Mahābhārata, p. 16, note 3.

The Mahābhārata, Ádi Parvan, pp. 136, 138, has two accounts of the descendants of Púru, differing, materially, in the beginning, from each other, and from the lists of the Purāṇas. In the first, ¶ Pravira is made the son of Púru; his son is Manasyu, who has three sons, Śakta, Saṁhanana, and Vāggmin; and there the line stops. No two of all my MSS. agree as to this family. Professor Wilson's Bengal translation has names (in a different order,) as in the text, except that Kṛiteyu stands in place of Vrateyu. Vrateyu is the ninth son, in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XX., 4; he and Vaneyu being transposed.

The Harivaiṣṇa, sl. 1659, 1660, has, according to my best MSS.: Rīcheyu, Kṛikaṇeyu, Kaksheyu, Sthaṇḍileyu, Sannateyu, Kṛiteyu, Jaleyu, Sthaleyu, Dhaneyu, Vaneyu. The variants of different copies are numerous. The mother of these ten sons, according to some MSS., was Ghṛitāchī, the Apsaras.

Purāṇa. The Hari Vaṁśa* omits him; making sad blundering work of the whole passage. Thus, the construction is such as to intimate that Taṁsu (or Taṁsurodha) had a wife named Ilā,† the daughter of Medhātithi,—that is, his brother's great-grand-daughter:

मेधातिथिः सुतस्तस्य यस्मात्काण्वायना द्विजाः ।

इला नाम तु यस्यासीत्कन्या वै जनमेजय ।

ब्रह्मवादिन्याधस्त्री च तंमुस्तामभ्यगच्छत् ॥

But this, as the commentator observes, is contrary to common sense (अर्थकत्वादयुक्तं); and he would read it, therefore, इली नाम तु यस्यासीत्कन्या, 'the daughter of him who was named Ilin;,' a Raja so called. But, in the Vāyu and Matsya, we have Ilinā, the daughter of Yama, married to Taṁsu, and mother of Malina or Anila; more correctly, perhaps, Ailina:

इलिना तु यमस्यासीत्कन्या साजनयत्सुतम् ।

त्रसो (तंसो) सुदयितं पुत्रं मलिनं ब्रह्मवादिनम् ॥

उपदानवी ततो लेभे चतुरस्त्विनितात्मजात् ।

सुष्यन्तमिति ॥‡

The blunder of the Hari Vaṁśa, therefore, arises from the compiler's reading Yasya, 'of whom,' instead of Yamasya, 'of Yama.' It is not an error of transcription; for the metre requires Yasya: and the remark of the commentator proves the correctness of the reading. The name occurs Ilina (इलिन), the son of Taṁsu, in the Mahābhārata, § agreeably to the Anuvamśa-śloka which is there quoted. 'Saraswatī bore Taṁsu to Matināra; and Taṁsu begot a son, Ilina, by Kālingī:'

तंसु सरस्वती पुत्रं मतिनारादजीजनत् ।

इलिनं जनयामास कालिङ्गा तंमुरात्मजम् ॥

* Śl. 1718, 1719.

† Ilinī is the accepted reading.

Hamilton (Buchanan)¶ calls her the wife of Sughora. The four sons are named, in other authorities, with some variations: Dushyanta, Sushyanta (or Ṛishyanta, or Sumanta), Pravira, and Anagha (or Naya). Thou art the parent of this boy: Śakuntalā has spoken truth."* From the expression 'cherish' (bharaswa) the prince was called Bharata.¹†

¹ These two ślokas are taken from the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parvan, p. 112,‡ and are part of the testimony borne, by a heavenly messenger, to the birth of Bharata. They are repeated in the same book, in the account of the family of Pūru, p. 139.§ They occur, with a slight variation of the order, in other Purāṇas, as the Vāyu &c.,|| and show the greater antiquity of the story of Śakuntalā, although they do not narrate it. The meaning of the name Bharata is differently explained in the Śakuntalā.¶ He is said

* माता भस्त्रा पितुः पुत्रो येन जातः स एव सः ।
भरस्व पुत्रं दुष्यन्त मावमंस्थाः शकुन्तलाम् ॥
रेतोधाः पुत्र उन्नयति नरदेव यमचयात् ।
त्वं चास्य धाता गर्भस्य सत्यमाह शकुन्तला ॥

In the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XX., 21, 22, we find these identical words, with the change—mending the metre,—of पुत्र उन्नयति into पुत्रो नयति. Burnouf translates the passage as follows:

"La mère est le réceptacle; c'est au père qui l'a engendré qu'appartient le fils: protège ton fils, ô Duchyanta; ne méprise pas Çakuntalā.

"Un fils qui donne à son père de la postérité, ô roi, le fait remonter de la demeure de Yama; tu es le père de cet enfant: Çakuntalā a dit la vérité."

† This sentence is added by the Translator.

|| Add the Harivaṃśa, śl. 1724—1726.

¶ The two explanations that follow occur near the end of Act VII, of the Śakuntalā.

Bharata had, by different* wives, nine sons; but they were put to death by their own mothers, because Bharata remarked, that they bore no resemblance to him, and the women were afraid that he would, therefore, desert them. The birth of his sons being thus unavailing, Bharata sacrificed to the Maruts; and they gave him Bharadvāja,—the son of Brīhaspati, by Mamatā, the wife of Utathya,†—expelled by the kick of Dīrghatamas, (his half-brother, before his time). This verse explains the purport of his appellation: “‘Silly woman,’ said Brīhaspati, ‘cherish this child of two fathers’ (bhara dvā-jam‡). ‘No, Brīhaspati,’ replied Mamatā: ‘do you take care of him.’ So saying, they both abandoned him; but, from their expressions, the boy was called Bharadvāja.”§ He was, also, termed Vitatha, in allusion to the unprofitable (vitatha) birth to be so called from ‘supporting’ the world: he is, also, there named Sarvadamana, ‘the conqueror of all.’

* My Ajmere and Arrah MSS. read ‘three’. Herewith the Bhāgavata-purāṇa agrees, and, further, calls them natives of Vidarbha.

† See Vol. III., p. 16, note §.

‡ The rational etymology of Bharadvāja is bharat + vāja.

§ मूढे भर द्वाजमिमं भर द्वाजं बृहस्पते ।

यातौ यदुक्ता पितरौ भरद्वाजस्तस्त्वयम् ॥

This stanza, which occurs in the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, IX., XX., 38, also, is thus rendered by Burnouf:

“Femme ignorante, nourris ce fils de deux pères, [disait Brīhaspati]. Nourris-le toi-même, ô Brīhaspati, [répondit Mamatā]. Et parce que le père et la mère, après avoir ainsi parlé, s’en allèrent, [laissant l’enfant,] il fut nommé Bharadvāja.”

of the sons of Bharata.¹ The son of Vitatha was Bha-

¹ The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa (the latter, especially,) appear to have modified this legend, with the view, perhaps, of reconciling those circumstances which are related of Bharadwāja, as a sage, with his history as a king. Whilst, therefore, they state that Bharadwāja was brought, by the winds, to Bharata, they state that he was so brought to perform a sacrifice, by which a son was born, whom Bharadwāja also inaugurated:

धर्मसंक्रमणं चापि मरुद्भिर्भरताय वै ।
अयाजयद्भरद्वाजो महद्भिः क्रतुभिर्हि तम् ॥
पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्य छते पुत्रजन्मनि ।
ततोऽथ वितथो नाम भरद्वाजात्सुतोऽभवत् ॥ *

In the Vāyu, Matsya, and Agni, however, the story is much more consistently narrated; and Bharadwāja, being abandoned by his natural parent, is brought by the winds, as a child, not as a sage; and, being adopted by Bharata, is one and the same with Vitatha, as our text relates. Thus, in the Vāyu, the Maruts bring to Bharata, already sacrificing for progeny, (भरद्वाजं ततः पुत्रं वार्हस्यत्वं) "Bharadwāja, the son of Bṛihaspati;" and Bharata, receiving him, says: "This Bharadwāja shall be Vitatha:"

ततः स वितथो नाम भरद्वाजस्तदास्थहम् ।

The Matsya, also, says, the Maruts, in compassion, took the child, and, being pleased with Bharata's worship, gave it to him, and he was named Vitatha:

जगृह्णन् भरद्वाजं मरुतः कृपयान्विताः ।

* * * * *

तेन ते मरुतस्तस्य मरुत्सोमेन तुष्टुवुः ॥

उपनिन्युर्भरद्वाजं पुत्रार्थं भरताय वै ।

* * * * *

पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्मिन्कृते वै पुत्रजन्मनि ।

ततस्तु वितथो नाम भरद्वाजो नृपो भवान् ॥

And the Agni tells the whole story in one verse:

ततो मरुद्भिरानीय पुत्रः स तु बृहस्पतेः ।

संक्रामितो भरद्वाजः क्रतुभिर्वितथोऽभवत् ।

"Then, the son of Bṛihaspati being taken by the winds, Bharatadwāja was transferred with sacrifice, and was Vitatha.” The account given in the Bhāgavata is to the same purpose. The commentator on the text also makes the matter clear enough: भरद्वाजस्यैव भरतपुत्रत्वदशायां वितथेति नाम । ‡ “The name of Bharadwāja, in the condition of son of Bharata, was Vitatha.” It is clear that a new-born infant could not be the officiating priest at a sacrifice for his own adoption, whatever the compiler of the Hari Vamśa may please to assert. From Bharadwāja, a Brahman by birth, and king by adoption, descended Brahmans and Kshattriyas, the children of two fathers:

तस्मादेव भरद्वाजाद्ब्राह्मणाः क्षत्रिया भुवि ।

ब्राम्हणायणनामानः स्मृता द्विपितरस्तु वै ॥ §

The Mahābhārata, in the Ādi Parvan, tells the story very simply. In one place,—p. 136, v. 3710,—it says, that Bharata, on the birth of his children proving vain, obtained, from Bharadwāja, by great sacrifices, a son, Bhumanyu; and, in another passage, it makes Bhumanyu the son of Bharata by Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, king of Kāśī: || p. 139, v. 3785. The two are not incompatible.

¹ Manyu: Bhāgavata. Suketu: Agni. ¶ But the Brahma and Hari Vamśa omit this and the next generation, and make Suhotra, Anuhotra,  Gaya, Garga, and Kapila the sons of Vitatha. They then assign to Suhotra two sons, Kāśika and Gṛitsamati, †† and

The Brahma Purāṇa, in some degree, and the Hari Vamśa, in a still greater, have made most extraordinary confusion in the instance of this name. In our text, and in all the best authorities, we have three Suhotras, perfectly distinct: 1. Suhotra, great-grandson of Amāvasu, father of Jahnu, and ancestor of Viśvāmitra and the Kauśikas (vide supra, p. 14); 2. Hastin, who founded the city of Hastinápura.^{1*} The hotra, the son of Bṛihatksattra, grandson of Vitatha, and parent of Hastin. In the two blundering compilations mentioned, we have, first (Hari Vamśa, ch. 20), a Suhotra, son of Bṛihatksattra, of the race of Pūru: his descent is not given; but, from the names which follow Suhotra, the dynasty is that of our present text: secondly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 27), Suhotra, son of Kānchana, of the line of Amávasu, and father of Jahnu, &c.: thirdly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 29), Suhotra, the son of Kshattraviddha, and progenitor of the Kāśi kings: fourthly (Hari Vamśa, ch. 32), we have the first and third of these personages confounded; Suhotra is made the son of Vitatha, and progenitor of the Kāśi kings, the dynasty of whom is repeated; thus connecting them with the line of Pūru, instead of Áyus, in opposition to all authority. Again, we have a notable piece of confusion; and Suhotra, the son of Vitatha, is made the father of Bṛihat, the father of the three princes who, in our text, and in the Hari Vamśa, ch. 20, are the sons of Hastin; and amongst whom Ajamidha is made the father of Jahnu, and ancestor of the Kausikas, instead of being, as in ch. 27, and as everywhere else, of the family of Amávasu. The source of all this confusion is obvious. The compilers extracted all the authentic traditions accurately enough; but, puzzled by the identity of name, they have, also, mixed the different accounts together, and caused very absurd and needless perplexity. It is quite clear, also, that the Hari Vamśa does not deserve the pains taken, and taken fruitlessly, by Mr. Hamilton and M. Langlois, to reduce it to consistency. It is of no weight whatever, as an authority for the dynasties of kings,† although it furnishes some particular details, which it has picked up, possibly, from authentic sources not now available.

¹ From whom the Maitreya Brahmans were descended: Hari Vamśa. ¶ In the Matsya and Agni, the son of Mitráyu is called Maitreya (see Vol. I., p. 6). The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa here close the lineage of Divodása: the Agni adds but one name, Somápi. They then proceed with the descendants of Śrinjaya, one of the Panchálas,—or, Panchadhanus, Somadatta, Sahadeva,—and then, as in our text. The Váyu and Bhágavata agree with the latter, in making the line continuous from Divodása. According to the Matsya and Brahma Purāṇas, †† the race of Ajamidha became extinct in the person of Sahadeva; but Ajamidha himself was reborn, as Somaka, in order to continue his lineage, which was, thence, called the Somaka family. It was in the reign of Drupada that the possessions of the Panchálas were divided; Droṇa, assisted by the Pándavas, conquering the country, and ceding the southern portion again to Drupada, as related in the Mahábhārata. The two princes last named in the list figure in the Great War.

PARIKSHIT (the son of Kuru,)* had four sons, Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena, and Bhīmasena.¹ The

¹ This, although it occurs in other authorities, appears to be an error; for these are the sons of a subsequent Parikshit (see the next chapter, p. 162). The Matsya omits Parikshit here; and the Bhāgavata † states that he had no children. In most of the Purāṇas, however, the line of Parikshit is continued; but there is very great confusion in the lineage. According to the Vāyu, ‡ Janamejaya was the son of Parikshit, whose son was Śrutasena, whose son was Bhīmasena. Janamejaya had, also, a son named Suratha; but Suratha was, also, the name of the son of Jahnu, from whom the line continues as in the text. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa also make Suratha the son both of Janamejaya and of Jahnu; and they observe, that there are two Rikshas, two Parikshits, three Bhīmasenas, and two Janamejayas, in the Lunar race. § Some of the confusion probably originates with the Mahābhārata, which, as before noticed, || gives two lists from Pūru to Śāntanu, differing from one another, and from all the lists of the Purāṇas. names have been retained as appear to have furnished our text and that of other Puráñas with distinct persons; thus making the members of one fraternity so many descents. Of the two lists, however, the second is, probably, to be regarded as the more recent, if not more correct; for Vaiśampáyana repeats it at Janamejaya's request, because the latter is not satisfied with the summary account which the former had first communicated to him. The commentator remarks, touching Ríksha: पूर्वोक्तादजमीढपुत्राद्वादन्यः । The word अन्यः, 'other', connected with Ríksha, is, thus, to distinguish him from Ríksha, son of Ajamidha, mentioned in p. 148, supra.

Every one of my MSS. inserts Bhímasena; and so does Professor Wilson's Hindu-made English version. The Bhágavata-purána omits him.

In the kingdom over which Śántanu ruled there was no rain for twelve years. Apprehensive that the country would become a desert, the king assembled the Brahmans, and asked them why no rain fell, and what fault he had committed. They told him, that he was, as it were, a younger brother married before an elder;‡ for he was in the enjoyment of the earth, which was the right of his elder brother, Devāpi.§

“What, then, am I to do?” said the Raja. To which they replied: “Until the gods shall be displeased with Devápi, by his declining from the path of righteousness,* the kingdom is his; and to him, therefore, you should resign it.” When the minister of the king, Ásmasárin,† heard this, he collected a number of ascetics who taught doctrines opposed to those of the Vedas, and sent them into the forest, where, meeting with Devápi, they perverted the understanding of the simple-minded prince, and led him to adopt heretical notions. In the meantime, Śántanu, being much distressed to think that he had been guilty of the offence intimated by the Brahmans, sent them, before him, into the woods, and then proceeded thither, himself, to restore the kingdom to his elder brother. When the Brahmans arrived at the hermitage of Devápi, they informed him, that, according to the doctrines of the Vedas, succession to a kingdom was the right of the elder brother. But he entered into discussion with them, and in various ways advanced arguments which had the defect of being contrary to the precepts of the Vedas. When the Brahmans heard this, they turned to Śántanu, and said: “Come hither, Raja. You need give yourself no further trouble in this matter: the dearth is at an end. This man is fallen from his state; for he has uttered words of disrespect to the authority of the eternal, uncreated Veda; and, when the elder brother is degraded, there is no sin in the prior espou-

* Parjanya, in the Sanskrit.

† The subjoined close translation of this legend concerning Śántanu is taken from Dr. Muir's Original Sanskrit Texts, Part I., pp. 274—276 (2nd ed.):

"Devápi, while yet a boy, retired to the forest; and Śántanu became king. Regarding him this verse is current in the world: 'Every decrepit man whom he touches with his hands becomes young. He is called Śántanu from that work whereby he obtains supreme tranquillity (śānti). The god did not rain on the country of this Śántanu for twelve years. Beholding, then, the ruin of his entire realm, the king inquired of the Bráhmans: 'Why does not the god rain on this country? What is my offence?' The Bráhmans replied: 'This earth, which is the right of thy elder brother, is now enjoyed by thee; thou art a parivettī (one married before his elder brother).' Receiving this reply, he again asked them: 'What must I do?' They then answered: 'So long as Devápi does not succumb to declension from orthodoxy, and other offences, the royal authority is his, by right; to him, therefore, let it be given, without further question.' When they had so said, the king's principal minister, Aśmasárin, employed certain ascetics propounding doctrines contrary to the declarations of the Vedas to proceed into the forest, by whom the understanding of the very simple-minded prince (Devápi) was let to adopt a system at variance with those sacred books. King Śántanu, being distressed for his offence, in consequence of what the Bráhmans had said to him, went, preceded by those Bráhmans, to the forest, in order to deliver over the kingdom to his elder brother. Arriving at the hermitage, they came to prince Devápi. The Bráhmans addressed to him statements founded on the declarations of the Veda, to the effect that the royal authority should be exercised by the elder brother. He, on his part, expressed to them many things that were vitiated by reasonings contrary to the tenour of the Veda. The Bráhmans then said to Śántanu: 'Come hither, O king. CHAPTER XXI.

Future kings. Descendants of Parikshit, ending with Kshemaka.

I WILL now enumerate the kings who will reign in future periods.¹ The present monarch, Parikshit,^{2*} will have four sons, Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena, and Bhīmasena.^{3†} The son of Janamejaya‡ will be Śatánika,⁴ who will study the Vedas under Yájna-vaikya, and military science with Kṛipa; but, becoming dissatisfied with sensual enjoyments, he will ¹ The style now adopted is that of prophecy; as Vyása could not, consistently, have recorded the events which were posterior to his time.

² Also read Parikshita, Pariksha, and Parikshi.

³ Vide supra, p. 152. The Vāyu and Matsya relate, rather obscurely, a dispute between Janamejaya and Vaiśampāyana, in consequence of the former's patronage of the Brahmans of the Vájasaneyi branch of the Yajurveda, in opposition to the latter, who was the author of the black, or original, Yajus (see Vol. III., p. 52). Janamejaya twice performed the Aśwamedha, according to the Vájasaneyi ritual, and established the Trisarví, §—or use of certain texts, by Āsmaka and others,—by the Brahmans of Anga and by those of the middle country. He perished, however, in consequence; being cursed by Vaiśampāyana. Before their disagreement, Vaiśampāyana related the Mahábhārata to Janamejaya. Mahábhārata, Ādi Parvan.

The Brahma Purāṇa has a totally different series, or: Parikshit, Sūryapīda, Chandrapīda, Janamejaya, Satyakarṇa, Śwetakarṇa, Sukumāra, and Ajaśyāma.

In the Vāyu-purāṇa I find Nībandhu, (or Nirvaktra?), and then, Ushṇa(?), Chitraratha, Śuchidratha, Dhṛitimat, Susheṇa. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Nībandhu, Chitraratha, Śuchidratha, Dhṛitimat, Susheṇa.

In a Sanskrit collection of Paurāṇik extracts, prepared for Colonel Wilford, to which I have access, there is part of a chapter from the Vāyu-purāṇa, and a similar draft from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa,—beginning with mention of Adhisimakrīṣhṇa,—covering nearly all the rest of this Book. The present and the two ensuing Chapters of the Vishṇu-purāṇa likewise occur there.

For the present I am reduced to a single MS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa: vide supra, p. 124, note †.

§ This means: “Another Śatānīka will be his son”. The word अपरः, ‘another’, is here used with allusion to Śatānīka, son of Nakula, spoken of in p. 159, supra. Two of my MSS. have जनमेजयस्य तस्य; and one omits अपरः. The identical words अपरः शतानीकः are rendered, near the end of this chapter, “another Śatānīka”.

¶ Read Kathāsaritśāgara. See the opening of its second Lambaka.

¶ The succession—Arjuna being called the founder of the family,—runs thus: Abhimanyu, Parikshit, Janamejaya, Śatānīka, Sahasrānīka, Udayana.

In the Hindu-made English translation, Supratika is so written, that, unless scrutinized a little closely, it might be mistaken for Supratitha.

Lāngala: Bhāgavata. This and the two preceding names are of considerable chronological interest; for Śākya is the name of the author, or reviver, of Buddhism, whose birth† appears to have occurred in the seventh, and death in the sixth, century before Christ (B. C. 621—543). There can be no doubt of the individual here intended, although he is out of his place; for he was the son—not the father—of Śuddhodana, and the father of Rāhula; as he is termed, in the Amara‡ and Haima Kośas, § Śaundhodani || or Śuddhodanasuta, ‘the son of Śuddhodana,’ and Rāhulasū, ‘the parent of Rāhula.’ So, also, in the Mahāwanso, Sīdhārtha or Śākya is the son of Śuddhodano, ¶ and father of Rāhulo. Turnour’s translation, p. 9. Whether they are rightly included amongst the princes of the race of Ikshwāku is more questionable; for Śuddhodana is, usually, described as a petty prince, whose capital was not Ayodhyā, but Kapila or Kapilavastu. At the same time, it appears that the provinces of the Doab had passed into the possession of princes of the Lunar line; and the children of the Sun may have been reduced to the country north of the Ganges, or the modern Goruckpoor, in which Kapila was situated. The Buddhists do, usually, consider their teacher Śākya to be descended from Ikshwāku. The chronology is less easily adjusted; but it is not altogether incompatible. According to the lists of the text, Śākya, as the twenty-second of the line of Ikshwāku, is contemporary with Ripunjaya, the oldest reads:

The same number of princes does not necessarily imply equal duration of dynasty; and Ikshwāku's descendants may have outlasted those of Jarāsandha; or, as is more likely,—for the dynasty was obscure, and is, evidently, imperfectly preserved,—several descents may have been omitted, the insertion of which would reconcile the Paurāṇik lists with those of the Buddhists, and bring Śākya down to the age of Bimbisāra. It is evident, from what occurs in other authorities, that the Aikshwāka‡ princes are regarded as contemporaries even of the Śaishunāga dynasty: vide infra, p. 182, note 4.

¶ And so reads the Brahmānda-purāṇa.

¶ My manuscripts of the Matsya-purāṇa are so carelessly executed, that I have seldom thought it worth while to consult them. As, however, we are now approaching the historical period, I use them, though to little satisfactory purpose, as will be manifest. These manuscripts are five in number: but only four of them contain the section relating to future kings and peoples. Of these four, one, as compared with the others, is noticeably meagre, and omits at least a third of the kings named in the present chapter. At the same time, it exhibits a large number of variants. But these peculiarities seem to be merely a result of carelessness.

are the Bārhadhrathas, who will reign for a thousand years.¹

¹ Our list and that of the *Váyu specifies twenty-one kings† after Sahadeva: the Bhágavata specifies twenty,‡ and, in another passage,§ states that to be the number. My copy of the Matsya names but nineteen; and the Radcliffe,|| but twelve: but both agree in making the total thirty-two. They all concur with the text, also, in stating, that 1000 years had elapsed from the Great War, at the death of the last Bārhadhratha prince;¶ and this is more worthy of credit than the details, which are, obviously, imperfect.

* The Váyu-purāṇa says that thirty-two kings will spring from Bṛihadhratha, and that their kingdom will endure for a thousand years:

द्वाविंशच्च नृपा ह्येते भवितारो बृहद्रथात् ।

We find, in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa,—unless the reading is corrupt,—only twenty-two kings spoken of:

‡ Vide supra, p. 176, note ††††. § A single MS. has Śunaka

¶ Corrected from "Pradyota", which I find in only one MS. Pradyota is the reading of the Váyu-purāṇa and of the Bhágavata-purāṇa. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Sudyota, and 23 years.

Mention is found of a Pradyota who had a son Jaghanjaya. See my Preface to the Vāsavadattā, p. 53. ¶ Gopálaka, in one copy.

 Sunika is the reading in all my four copies of the Váyu-purāṇa, and in Colonel Wilford's manuscript extracts. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has the same name.

² Ajaka, 21 years, Váyu; ¶ Súrýaka, 21, Matsya; Rájaka, Bhágavata.

³ 20 years, Váyu†† and Matsya.††

⁴ This number is also specified by the Váyu and Bhágavata; §§ and the several years of the reigns of the former agree with the total. The particulars of the Matsya compose 145 |||| years; but there is, no doubt, some mistake in them.

* Almost as ordinary a reading, in my MSS., is Viśákhayúpa; and two of them have Viśákhayúpa.

† The original is पञ्च प्रद्योताः, "the five Pradyotas;" the reading recognized by the commentator. One MS. yields, however, "the five Pradyotanas." The Bhágavata-purána has पञ्च प्रद्योतनाः, the gloss on which is प्रद्योतनाः । प्रद्योतसंज्ञाः । The Váyu-purána has Pradyotas.

‡ "Twenty-eight", according to four copies.

§ Three of my MSS., including the two oldest and best, have Viśákhadhúpa; another, Viśákhayúpa; the remaining one, Viśákhayúpa.

|| Two MSS. have Viśákhayúpa; one, Viśákhayúpa, the reading of the Bhágavata-purána.

The Brahmánda-purána has Viśákhayúpa, and 100 years.

¶ One MS. of the Váyu-purána—very inferior,—has 31 years. In the Brahmánda-purána, Ajaka is assigned 21 years.

 Corrected from "Rajaka".

†† The name that I find everywhere in the Váyu-purána is Vartivardhana.

‡‡ 30 years are assigned to Nandivardhana in all my copies of the Matsya-purána. The Brahmánda-purána gives him 20 years.

§§ XII., I., 4.

||| By note ‡‡, above, we are enabled to alter this number to one nearer correctness,—namely, 155. There is, however, still a mistake of 3 in excess,—owing, doubtless, to corruptness of the MSS.; for all mine agree in stating the total to be 152.

The next prince will be Śiśunāga;¹ his son will be Kākavarṇa;^{2*} his son will be Kshemadharman;³ his son will be Kshattraujas;⁴ his son will be Vidmisāra;^{5†}

‡ हत्वा तेषां यशः कृत्वां शिशुनाको भविष्यति ।

Two copies have Giripraja; one, Girivrata. Equally gross mistakes, it is to be presumed, disfigure all my MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa.

§ The first verse of a stanza there given is the same as in the preceding note. The second verse runs:

|| Śakavarṇa or Śākavarṇa is the name in all my copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa.

¶ Kshemavarman, in three MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa, those of best note; while the rest have Kshemadharman.

The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Kshemadharman, and 20 years.

There is a break in Colonel Wilford's manuscript extract from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, where there should be mention of the two kings preceding Kshemadharman.

 Therewith agrees the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

†† Three of my copies have Kshemavit, 24 years; the other, Kshemārchis, 40 years.

¹ 25 years, Vāyu; † 27, Matsya; ‡ but the latter inserts a Kañwayana, § 9 years, and Bhūmimitra (or Bhūmiputra), 14 years, before him. In this and the preceding name we have appellations of considerable celebrity in the traditions of the Bauddhas. Vidmisāra—read, also, Vindhusāra, || Vilwisāra, &c.,—is, most probably, their Bimbasāra, ¶ who was born at the same time with Śākya, and was reigning at Rājagṛiha, when he began his religious career. The Mahāwaṃso says that Siddhatto and Bimbisāro were attached friends, as their fathers had been before them. P. 10. Śākya is said to have died in the reign of Ajātaśatru, the son of Bimbasāra, in the eighth year of his reign. The Vāyu transposes these names; and the Matsya still more alters the order of Ajātaśatru; but the Bhāgavata concurs with our text. The Buddhist authority differs from the Purāṇas, materially, as to the duration of the reigns; giving to Bimbisāro, 52 years, and to Ajātasattu, 32. The latter, according to the same, murdered his father. Mahāwaṃso, p. 10. We may, therefore, with some confidence, claim for these princes a date of about six centuries B. C. They are considered contemporary with Śuddhodana, &c., in the list of the Aikshwākas  (vide supra, p. 169, note 7).

* An Ajātaśatru, king of the Kāśis, is commemorated in the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa Upanishad, IV., I., and elsewhere.

† In all my MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa, the order is: Ajātaśatru, Kshattraujas, Bimbisāra.

‡ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, at least in my single MS., gives 35 years to Ajātaśatru.

§ The name here intended is very doubtful in all my three MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa.

|| This—and so the Bindusena mentioned in the Translator's last note,—looks like a corruption of Bindusāra; and Bindusāra was a remote descendant of Bimbisāra. Vide infra, p. 186, note 1.

¶ Vidmisāra, &c. are, all, misspellings of Bimbisāra. Vide infra, p. 186, note *.

There are similar verses in the Brahmánda-purána; but they are copied, in Colonel Wilford's volume of Pauráṇik extracts,—where alone I have access to them,—with such deplorable carelessness, and with so many omissions, that I can do no more than refer to them. They seem to resemble the corresponding stanzas in the Matsya-purána rather more closely than those in the Váyu-purána.

¹ The Bhāgavata calls him Mahāpadmapati, 'the lord of Mahāpadma;' which the commentator interprets 'sovereign of an infinite host' or 'of immense wealth;' †† Mahāpadma signifying 100,000 millions. The Vāyu and Matsya, §§ however, consider Mahāpadma as another name of Nanda. |||

* Vide supra, p. 23.

† It is to be understood, in this and similar cases, that the two Purāṇas agree.

‡ This is the name that I find in the Vāyu-purāṇa.

§ Two of my MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa have this reading; another, Kāsheyas; another, Kāleyas.

|| One of my MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa gives 22: the other three, 32.

¶ That is to say, where the Vāyu-purāṇa names the Śakas, the Matsya-purāṇa names the Āsmakas.

†† I find 36 in both Purāṇas.

‡‡ See the commentator's words, at the end of note |||, below.

§§ They say nothing of Nanda, naming Mahāpadma only. The same is the case with the Brahmandā-purāṇa.

||| So considers the Bhāgavata-purāṇa, where we read—XII., I., 8 and 9:

महापद्मपतिः कश्चिन्नन्दः क्षत्रविनाशकृत् ।

* * * * *

शासिष्यति महापद्मो द्वितीय इव भार्गवः ।

On the first of these verses the commentator, Śrīdhara, remarks: नन्दो नाम कश्चित्महापद्मसंख्यायाः सेनायाः धनस्य वा पतिर्भविष्यति । अत एव महापद्म इत्यपि तस्य नाम । kings of the earth will be Śúdras. He will bring the whole earth under one umbrella: he will have eight sons, Sumálya* and others, who will reign after Mahápadma; and he and his sons¹ will govern for a hun-

¹ So the Bhágavata, also; but it would be more compatible with chronology to consider the nine Nandas as so many descents. The Váyu and Matsya† give eighty-eight years to Mahápadma, and only the remaining twelve to Sumálya and the rest of the remaining eight; these twelve years being occupied with the efforts of Kauřilya to expel the Nandas. The Maháwamśo, evidently intending the same events, gives names and circumstances differently; it may be doubted, if with more accuracy. On the deposal of Nágadásako, the people raised to the throne the minister Susanágo, who reigned eighteen years. This prince is, evidently, confounded with the Śisunága of the Puráṇas. He was succeeded by his son, Kálásoko, who reigned twenty years; and he was succeeded by his sons, ten of whom reigned together for twenty-two years: subsequently there were nine, who, according to their seniority, reigned for twenty-two years. The Brahman Chánako put the ninth surviving brother, named Dhana-nando (Rich Nanda), to death, and installed Chandagutto. Maháwamśo, pp. 15 and 21. These particulars, notwithstanding the alteration of some of the names, belong, clearly, to one story; and that of the Buddhists looks as if it was borrowed and modified from that of the Brahmans. The commentary on the Maháwamśo, translated by Mr. Turnour (Introduction, p. xxxviii.), calls the sons of Kálásoko "the nine Nandos;" but another Buddhist authority, the Dípawamśo, omits Kálásoko, and says that Susanágo had ten brothers, who, after his demise, reigned, collectively, twenty-two years. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, November, 1838 (p. 930).

¹ For the particulars of the story here alluded to, see the Mudrá Rákshasa, Hindu Theatre, Vol. II. Kauṭilya is also called, according to the commentator on our text, Vátsyáyana, Vishnugupta, and Chāṇakya. According to the Matsya Purāṇa, Kauṭilya retained the regal authority for a century; but there is some inaccuracy in the copies.†

² This is the most important name in all the lists; as it can scarcely be doubted that he is the Sandrocottus, or,—as Athenæus writes, more correctly,—the Sandrocoptus, of the Greeks, as I have endeavoured to prove in the Introduction to the Mudrá Rákshasa.‡ The relative positions of Chandragupta, Vidmisāra (or Bimbisāra), and Ajātaśatru serve to confirm the identification. Śākya was contemporary with both the latter, dying in the eighth year of Ajātaśatru's reign. The Mahāwaṃso says he reigned twenty-four years afterwards; but the Vāyu makes his whole reign but twenty-five years,§ which would place the close of it B. C. 526. The rest of the Śāiśunāga dynasty, according to the Vāyu and Matsya, reigned 143 or 140 years; bringing their close to B. C. 383. Another century being deducted for the duration

* Burnouf, citing a high Buddhist authority, a Sanskrit work, gives the following genealogy: Bimbisāra (king of Rājagṛiha), Ajātaśatru, Udayibhadra, Muṇḍa, Kākavarṇin, Sahālin, Tulakuchi, Mahāmaṇḍala, Prasena-jit, Nanda, Bindusāra (king of Pātaliputra), Susīma. Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien, Vol. I., pp. 358, 359.

A Mongol authority interposes a king between Nanda and Chandragupta. See the Foë Kouë Ki, p. 230.

† There is something to the same effect in the Vāyu-purāṇa and in the Brahmaṇḍa-purāṇa.

of the Nandas would place the accession of Chandragupta B. C. 283. Chandragupta was the contemporary of Seleucus Nicator, who began his reign B. C. 310, and concluded a treaty with him B. C. 305. Although, therefore, his date may not be made out quite correctly from the Paurāṇik premises, yet the error cannot be more than twenty or thirty years. The result is much nearer the truth than that furnished by Buddhist authorities. According to the Mahāwaṃso, a hundred years had elapsed from the death of Buddha to the tenth year of the reign of Kálásoko (p. 15). He reigned other ten years, and his sons, forty-four, making a total of 154 years between the death of Śákya and the accession of Chandragupta, which is, consequently, placed B. C. 389, or above seventy years too early. According to the Buddhist authorities, Chan-ta-kut-ta (or Chandragupta) commenced his reign 396 B. C. Burmese Table; Prinsep's Useful Tables. Mr. Turnour, in his Introduction, giving to Kálásoko eighteen years subsequent to the century after Buddha, places Chandragupta's accession B. C. 381, which, he observes, is sixty years too soon; dating, however, the accession of Chandragupta from 323 B. C., or immediately upon Alexander's death,—a period too early by eight or ten years, at least. The discrepancy of dates, Mr. Turnour is disposed to think, "proceeds from some intentional perversion of the Buddhistical chronology." Introduction, p. L. The commentator on our text says that Chandragupta was the son of Nanda, by a wife named Murá, whence he and his descendants were called Mauryas: चन्द्रगुप्तं नन्दस्यैव पत्न्यन्तरस्य मुरासंज्ञस्य पुत्रं मौर्याणां प्रथमम् । Colonel Tod considers Maurya a corruption of Mori, the name of a Rajput tribe. The Tíkā on the Mahāwaṃso builds a story on the fancied resemblance of the word to Mayúra (Sanskrit), Mori (Prakrit), 'a peacock.' There being abundance of pea-fowl in the place where the Śákya tribe built a town, they called it Mori; and their princes were, thence, called Mauryas. Turnour, Introduction to the Mahāwaṃso. p. xxxix. Chandragupta reigned, according to the Vāyu Purāṇa, 24 years; according to the Mahāwaṃso, 34; to the Dīpawaṃso, 24.

The names are, also, differently arranged; and one is peculiar.‡ They are Śatadhanwan, Brīhadratha,§ Śuka,|| and Daśaratha.¶

¹ Aśoka, 36 years, Vāyu;  Śuka, †† 26, ‡‡ Matsya; Aśokavardhana, Bhāgavata; Asoko and Dhammāsoko, Mahāwaṃso. This king is the most celebrated of any in the annals of the Buddhists. §§ In the commencement of his reign, he followed the Brahmanical faith, but became a convert to that of Buddha, and a zealous encourager of it. He is said to have maintained, in his palace, 64,000 Buddhist priests, and to have erected 84,000 columns (or topes) throughout India. A great convocation of Buddhist priests was held in the eighteenth year of his reign, which was followed by missions to Ceylon and other places. According to Buddhist chronology, he ascended the throne 218 years after the death of Buddha, B. C. 325. As the grandson of Chandragupta, however, he must have been some time subsequent to this, or,—agreeably to the joint duration of the reigns of Chandragupta and Bindusāra, supposing the former to have commenced his reign about B. C. 315,—forty-nine years later, or B. C. 266. The duration of his reign is said to have been thirty-six years, bringing it down to B. C. 230; but, if we deduct these periods from the date assignable to Chandragupta, of B. C. 283, we shall place Aśoka's reign from B. C. 234 to 198. Now, it is certain that a number of very curious inscriptions, on columns and rocks, by a Buddhist prince, in an ancient form of letter, and the Pálí language, exist in India; and that some of them refer to Greek princes, who can be no other than members of the Seleucidan and Ptolemæan dynasties, and are, probably, Antiochus the Great* and Ptolemy Euergetes, kings of Syria and Egypt in the latter part of the third century before Christ. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, February and March, 1838. The Indian king appears always under the appellation Piyadasi (or Priyadarśin), 'the beautiful;' and is entitled Devánam piya, 'the beloved of the gods.' According to Buddhist authorities, the Rasawáhini and Dipawamso, quoted by Mr. Turnour (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, December 1837, p. 1056, and November, 1838, p. 930), Piyadasi or Piyadassano is identified, both by name and circumstances, with Aśoka; and to him, therefore, the inscriptions must be attributed. Their purport agrees well enough with his character; and their wide diffusion, with the traditionary report of the number of his monuments. His date is not exactly that of Antiochus the Great; but it is not very far different; and the corrections required to make it correspond are no more than the inexact manner in which both Brahmanical and Buddhist chronology is preserved may well be expected to render necessary.

¹ The name of Daśaratha, in a similar ancient character as that of Piyadasi's inscriptions, has been found at Gayá, amongst Buddhist remains, and, like them, deciphered by Mr. Prinsep: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, August, 1837, p. 677. A different series of names occurs in the Váyu;† or: Kuśála, 8 years; Bandhupálita, Indrapálita,‡ Daśavarman,§ 7 years; Śatadhara, 8 years; and Bṛihadaśwa,|| 7 years.¶ The Bhágavata agrees in

The dynasty of the Śungas will, next, become possessed of the sovereignty; for Pushpamitra,³ the gen-

³ The Bhāgavata omits this name, but states that there were ten Śungas; although, without Pushpamitra, only nine are named.
The Vāyu and Matsya have the same account of the circumstances of his accession to the throne: the former gives him a reign of sixty, the latter, of thirty-six,|| years. In a play attri-

General Cunningham informs me that he possesses two coins of an Agnimitra, containing characters similar to those of Aśoka's inscriptions.

पुष्पमित्रसुताश्चाष्टौ भविष्यन्ति समा नृपाः ।
भविता चापि सुज्येष्ठः सप्त वर्षाणि वै ततः ॥

From this it appears that Pushpamitra had sons who ruled for eight years. And then came Sujyeshtha, whose relationship to his predecessors is not stated.

The first half of this stanza may have been, originally, something like the following loose verse from the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, which makes Agnimitra son of Pushpamitra, and assigns him a reign of 8 years:

तत्सुतोऽग्निमित्रश्चाष्टौ भविष्यति समा नृपः ।

¶¶ And so has the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

 I find a name that looks like Megha: but all my MSS. are very doubtful here. The specification of three years is added.

†† The Vāyu-purāṇa has a name which looks, in my MSS., like Vīkramitra: only this is most unlikely, as being meaningless. The reign is of 14 years, according to one MS.; 9, possibly, according to the rest. The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Vajramitra, and 14 years. The Vāyu-purāṇa, in all probability, really has the same.

‡‡ Bhāgavata, and 32 years: Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

§§ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has Devabhūmi, and 10 years.

||| What total the Matsya-purāṇa has is not to be made out from my MSS.: the detailed reigns occupy, however, 112 years. Though its text declares the Śungas to be ten, it names but nine.

¶¶ The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has, also, 112 years:

named Vasudeva, will murder him, and usurp the kingdom. His son will be Bhūmimitra;* his son will be Nārāyaṇa; his son will be Suśarman.† These four Kaṇwāyanas‡ will be kings of the earth for forty-five§ years.¹

¹ The names of the four princes agree in all the authorities. The Matsya transfers the character of Vyasanin to the minister, with the further addition of his being a Brahman,—Dwija. In the lists given by Sir William Jones and Colonel Wilford, the four Kaṇwas are said to have reigned 345 years; but, in seven copies of the Vishṇu Purāṇa, from different parts of India, the number is, as given in the text, forty-five: एते काण्वायनाश्चत्वारः पञ्चचत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति । There is, however, authority for the larger number, both in the text of the Bhāgavata and the comment. The former¶ has:

काण्वायना इमे भूमिं चत्वारिंशच्च पञ्च च ।
शतानि त्रीणि भोक्ष्यन्ति वर्षाणां च कलौ युगे ॥

And the latter: काण्वायना वर्षाणां त्रीणि शतानि पञ्चचत्वारिंशद्वर्षाणि भूमिं भोक्ष्यन्ति । There is no doubt, therefore, of the purport of the text; and it is only surprising that such a chronology should have been inserted in the Bhāgavata, not only in opposition to all probability, but to other authority. The Vāyu and Matsya not only confirm the lower number, by stating it as a total, but by giving it in detail; thus:

* Bhūmitra: Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

† Sudharman: Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

‡ Corrected, here and further on, from "Kaṇwas", for which I find no authority. And see the original as quoted in the Translator's note in this page.

§ One MS. yields "forty".

¶ The Bhāgavata-purāṇa omits, in his place, Suśarman, whose name is supplied by the commentator Śrīdhara. See, further, note *, above.

The Vāyu-purāṇa has, in my MSS., Bhūtimitra, not Bhūmimitra; and its account of the Kaṇwāyanas, if decipherable, would, perhaps, prove different from that of our Purāṇa.

¹ The expressions Andhrajātiyas and Andhrabhṛityas have much perplexed Colonel Wilford, who makes three races out of one,—Andhras, Andhrajātiyas, and Andhrabhṛityas: Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 101. There is no warrant for three races, in the Purāṇas, although the Matsya, and, perhaps, the Vāyu, distinguishes two, as we shall hereafter see. Our text has but one, to which all the terms may be applied. The first of the dynasty was an Andhra by birth or caste (jātiya), and a servant (bhṛitya) of the last of the Kañwa race. So the Vāyu: सिन्धुको ह्यन्ध्रजातीयः। The Matsya:

काण्वायनस्तदा भूत्यः सुशर्माणं प्रसह्य तम् ।

शिथुकोऽन्ध्रः सजातीयः प्राप्स्यतीमां वसुधराम ॥

The terms 'an Andhra by caste' and 'a Bhṛitya' or servant, with the addition, in the last passage, of Vṛishala, 'a Śúdra', all apply to one person and one dynasty. Wilford has made wild work with his triad. The name of the first of this race is variously read: Sindhuka, Váyu; Śisuka, Matsya; Balin, ‡ Bhágavata; § and, according to Wilford, Chhesmaka || in the Brahmánda Purāṇa, and Śúdraka or Śúraka in the Kumáriká Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa: Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 107. ‡ One MS. gives Śivaskanda, the reading of Colonel Wilford, of the Translator's Bengal version, and that of the Bhāgavata-purāṇa.

§ Śātakarṇi, and called king of the south,—as Professor Wilson presently states,—is referred to in an inscription at Junagur. See the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, for 1838, pp. 339 and 341; and the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. VII., pp. 120 and 126. This inscription, which is in Sanskrit, shows that the name of the king in question begins with a dental sibilant.

Further, in the Nasik cave-inscriptions, names are found which are supposed to correspond to Śrisātakarṇi, Gotamīputra Śrisātakarṇi, and Yajñaśrī Śātakarṇi. Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. V., pp. 43, 47, 56.

We have, it is evident, excellent authority for accepting Gotamīputra, as against Gautamīputra and Gomatīputra.

¶ Colonel Wilford represents the Bhāgavata-purāṇa as naming Vafaka and Śivaswāti between Chakora and Gomatīputra. The name Vafaka is in no MS. that I have examined; and there is no room for it in the line where it was supposed to occur.

The actual enumeration of the text gives but 24 names; that of the Bhāgavata, but 23; that of the Vāyu, but 17. The Matsya has the whole 29 names, adding several to the list of our text; and the aggregate of the reigns amounts to 435 years and 6 months. †† The difference between this and the total specified arises, probably, from some inaccuracy in the MSS. As this list appears to be fuller than any other, it may be advisable to insert it as it occurs in the Radcliffe copy of the Matsya Purāṇa: §§

The reign of Chakora is here given as of six years,—not months, as in the Matsya-purāṇa.

The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa asserts that these kings will be thirty in number. The duration of the dynasty is given, but is expressed rather enigmatically. Apparently, it is 418 years.

Colonel Wilford, in preparing his table of the Andhrabhītyas, in the Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 116, could not have followed, exclusively, for the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, the extract of his which I have been obliged to use without means of controlling it. Thus, his text must have differed from mine: or he would not have given the reign of Śrīśātakarñi as of ten years. And again, he assigns 28 years to Skandaswātī; his extract assigning only 7, and most distinctly, too. Like myself, he seems to have had no other than the strange-looking readings Āvi and Yantramāti.

era, we learn from Pliny, who describes them as possessed of thirty fortified cities, with an army of 100,000 men and 2000 elephants. The Andræ† of this writer are, probably, the people of the upper part of the Peninsula; Andhra being the proper designation of Telingana. The Peutingerian tables, however, place the Andre-Indi on the banks of the Ganges; and the southern princes may have extended, or shifted, the site of their power. Towards the close of the dynasty, we find names that appear to agree with those of princes of middle India, of whom mention is made by the Chinese; as, Yue-gnai (Yajñaśrí), king of Kiapili, A. D. 408 (Des Guignes, I., 45), and Ho-lo-mien (Pulomán‡), king of Magadha in 621 (ibid., I., 56). The Paurāṇik lists place these two princes more nearly together; but we cannot rely implicitly upon their accuracy. Calculating from Chandragupta downwards, the Indian date of Yajna and the Chinese Yue-gnai corresponds; for we have:

10 Mauryas	137 years.
10 Śungas	112

But I suspect that Gardabhila is only a Bengal corruption of Gardabhin; and that it had its origin, in part, in the liability, in the local characters, of confusion between न and ल. Compare Vol II., p. 100, note †.

Colonel Wilford writes "Gardabhinās", though regard for grammar would have led him to write Gardabhins. Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., pp. 155 and 219.

a date remarkably near that derivable from the Chinese annals. If the Indian Pulomán be the same with the Chinese Ho-lo-mien, there must be some considerable omission in the Paurāṇik dynasty. There is a further identification in the case of Ho-lo-mien, which makes it certain that a prince of Magadha is intended; as the place of his residence is called, by the Chinese, Kia-so-mo-pu-lo-ching and Po-to-li-tse-ching, or, in Sanskrit, Kusumapura and Pátaliputra.* The equivalent of the latter name consists not only in the identity of the sounds Pátali and Po-to-li, but in the translation of 'putra' by 'tse'; each word meaning, in their respective languages, 'son.' No doubt can be entertained, therefore, that the city intended is the metropolis of Magadha, — Pátaliputra, or Palibothra. Wilford identifies Pulomat or Pulomán† with the Po-lo-mu-en of the Chinese; but Des Guignes interprets Po-lo-mu-en-kuë,‡ 'royaume des Brahmanes.' Buchanan (Hamilton), following the Bhágavata, as to the name of the last king, Salomadhi, would place him about A.D. 846; but his premises are far from accurate, and his deduction, in this instance at least, is of no weight: Genealogies of the Hindus, Introduction, p. 16. He supposes the Andhra kings of Magadha to have retained their power on the Ganges until the Mohammedan invasion (or the twelfth century), when they retired to the south, and reigned at Warankal, in Telingana. Inscriptions and coins, however, confirm the statement of the Purāṇas, that a different dynasty succeeded to the Andhras some centuries before the Mohammedan conquests; and the Chinese, also, record, that, upon the death of the king of Magadha, Ho-lo-mien (Pulomán?), some time before A. D. 648, great troubles in India took place. Des Guignes. Some very curious and authentic testimony to the actual existence of these Andhra kings has been lately afforded by the discovery of an ancient inscription in Gujerat, in which Rudra Dáman, the Kshatrpa (or Satrap) of Suráshtra, is recorded to have repeatedly overcome Sátakarñi, † king of the southern country (Dakshinápatha). The inscription is without date; but it is in an old character, and makes mention of the two Maurya princes, Chandragupta and Ásoka, as if not very long prior to its composition. Mr. J. Prinsep, to whom we are indebted for the deciphering and translating of this important document, has been, also, successful in deciphering the legends on a series of coins belonging to the princes of Suráshtra, amongst whom the name of Rudra Dáman occurs; and he is inclined, although with hesitation, to place these princes about a century after Ásoka,—or Rudra Dáman, about 153 B. C.: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, May, 1837, and April, 1838. According to the computation hazarded above, from our text, the race of Andhra kings should not commence till about 20 years B. C., which would agree with Pliny's notice of them; but it is possible that they existed earlier in the south of India, although they established their authority in Magadha only in the first centuries of the Christian era.

then, eleven Pauras will be kings for three hundred 200;* and Mlechchhas † (intending, perhaps, Maunas), 300 years. Total, ‡ 1601 years; or less than 19 years to a reign. They are not, however, continuous, but nearly contemporary, dynasties; and, if they comprise, as they probably do, the Greek and Scythian princes of the west of India, the periods may not be very wide of the truth. The Matsya begins the list with one more dynasty,—another Andhra (vide supra, p. 194, note 1), of whom there were seven:

अन्ध्राणां संस्थिते राज्ये तेषां भृत्यान्वया नृपाः ।

सप्तैवान्ध्रा भविष्यन्ति नवाभीरास्ततो नृपाः ॥

“When the dominion of the Andhras has ceased, there shall be seven other Andhras, kings of the race of their servants; and, then, nine§ Ábhíras.” The passage of the Váyú, although somewhat similar in terms, has a different purport:

अन्ध्राणां संस्थितानां च॥ तेषां वंशाः समाः पुनः ।

सप्तैव तु भविष्यन्ति दशाभीरास्ततो नृपाः ॥

“Of these, the Andhras having passed away, there shall be seven contemporary races; as, ten Ábhíras,” &c The passage is differently read in different copies; but this is the only intelligible reading. At the same time, it subsequently specifies a period for the duration of the Andhra dynasty, different from that before given, or three hundred years, as if a different race was referred to:

अन्ध्रा भोक्ष्यन्ति वसुधां शते द्वे च शतं च वै ।¶

* This interpretation may be doubtful. The original, as alone I find it, runs:

“The Andhras shall possess the earth two hundred years and one hundred.” The Matsya has twice five hundred :

अन्ध्राः श्रीपर्वतीयाश्च ते द्वे पञ्चशतं समाः ।

“The Śrīparvatīya Andhras, twice five hundred years.” One MS. has, more consistently, fifty-two years: द्विपञ्चाशतं समाः. But there is, evidently, something faulty in all the MSS. The expression of the Matsya, ‘Śrīparvatīya Andhras,’ is remarkable; Śrīparvata being in Telingana. There is, probably, some confusion of the two races, the Magadha and Talinga kings, in these passages of the Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata has a dynasty of seven Andhra kings, but of a different period (vide supra, p. 194, note 1). Colonel Wilford has attempted a verification of these dynasties; in some instances, perhaps, with success, though, certainly, not in all. The Ābhīras he calls the shepherd-kings of the north of India. They were, more probably, Greeks, or Scythians, or Parthians, along the lower Indus. Traces of the name occur, as formerly observed,* in the Abiria of Ptolemy; and the Ahīrs,† as a distinct race, still exist in Gujerat. Araish-i-Mahfil. The Śakas are the Sacæ; and the duration of their power is not unlikely to be near the truth. The eight Yavana kings may be, as he supposes, Greek princes of Bactria, or, rather, of Western India. The Tushāras he makes the Parthians. If the Bhāgavata has the preferable reading, Tushkāras,‡ they should not be surprised if it were a corruption of the same words that we find in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa:

अन्ध्रा भोज्यन्ति वसुधां शते द्वेऽर्धशतं च वै ।

were the Tochari, a Scythian race. The Murúndas, or, as he has it, Maurúndas, he considers to be a tribe of Huns,—the Morundæ of Ptolemy. According to the Matsya, they were of Mlechchha origin (Mlechchha-sambhava). The Váyu calls them Árya-mlechchhas; quere, barbarians of Ariana. Wilford regards the Maunas as, also, a tribe of Huns; and the word is, in all the MSS. of the Matsya, Húñas;† traces of whom may be still found in the west and south of India:‡ Inscription at Merritch, Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. III., p. 103. The Gardabhins Wilford conjectures to be descendants of Bahram Gor, king of Persia; but this is very questionable. That they were a tribe in the west of India may be conjectured; as some strange tales prevail, there, of a Gandharva, changed to an ass, marrying the daughter of the king of Dhárá: (Asiatic Researches, Vol. VI., p. 35, and Vol. IX., p. 147; also, ‘Cutch’, by Mrs. Postans, p. 18); fables suggested, no doubt, by the name Gardabha, signifying ‘an ass’. There is, also, evidently, some affinity between these Gardabhins and the old Gadhiyá Paisá, or ‘ass-money’, as vulgarly termed, found in various parts of Western India, and which is, unquestionably, of ancient date: Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, December, 1835, p. 688. It may be the coinage of the Gardabha princes; Gardabha being the original of Gadhá, meaning, also, an ‘ass’. I have elsewhere conjectured the possibility of their being current about a century and a half before our era: Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. III., p. 385. Colonel Tod, quoting a parallel passage in Hindí, reads, instead of Gardabhin, § Gor-ind, which he explains “the Indras (or lords) of Gor”; but the reading is, undoubtedly, erroneous.

¹ Kilakila, Kolakila, Kolikila, Kilinakila, as it is variously read.‡ Sir William Jones's Pandit stated that he understood it to be a city in the Marátha country (Asiatic Researches, Vol. XI., p. 142); and there has been found a confirmation of his belief, in an inscription where Kilagila,§ as it is there termed, is called the capital of Márasimha Deva, king of the Konkan: Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. IV., p. 282. This inscription dates A. D. 1058. The Purāṇas refer, probably, to a long antecedent date, when the Greek princes, or their Indo-Scythic successors, following the course of the Indus, spread to the upper part of the western coast of the Peninsula. The text calls them Yavanas; and the Vāyu and Matsya say they were Yavanas in institutions, manners, and policy: धर्मतः काम-तोऽर्चतः। || The Bhāgavata¶ names five of their princes,—Bhūtananda, Vangiri, Śisunandi, Yaśonandi, and Pravīraka,—

* Four MSS. have Vangara; one, Vyangala.

† Substituted for the "Śudhinandi" of the former edition, which I have met with nowhere. Sushinandi, the ordinary lection, is the word in Professor Wilson's Hindu-made version. One MS. has Sukhinandi; one, Śushirāndi; one, Śishyanandi.

‡ Four MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa have Kolikilas; one, Kilakilas. Two copies of the Matsya-purāṇa give Kilikilas; one, Kilakilas; the fourth, Kilakilas. The reading of the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa is Kailakilas. The Bhāgavata-purāṇa speaks of Kilikilā, which the commentator Śrīdhara says is the name of a city. The commentator on the Vishṇu-purāṇa calls the city Kelikilā.

§ It seems to be a mountain, giving name to a stronghold thereon.

who will reign 106 years; and they are, therefore, imperfect representatives of the series in our text. The Matsya has no further specific enumeration of any dynasty. The Vāyu makes Pravira the son of Vindhyaśakti;* the latter reigning 96 years, and the former, 60.† The latter is king of Kānchanapurī,‡ ‘the golden city,’ and is followed by four sons, whose names are not mentioned. Between Vindhyaśakti and Pravira, however, a dynasty of kings is introduced, some of the names of which resemble those of the Kilakila princes of the text.§ They are: Bhogin (the son of Śeshanāga ||), Sadāchandra, Nakhavat, Dhanadharmita, ¶ Viṃśaja, Bhūtinanda,—at a period before the end of the Śungas? (the copies have शुङ्गानां न कुलस्थान्ते), Madhunandi, his younger brother, Nandiyāśas; †† and, in his race, there will be

* Dr. Bhāu Dāji has published an inscription from Ajunta, in which, he says, there is mention of a king Vindhyaśakti and his son Pravara-sena. The same names of sire and son are found, he alleges, in the Vāyu-purāṇa. His MSS. must differ, then, from mine. See the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. VII., p. 65.

† In the Brahmānda-purāṇa, it seems to be stated that Dauhitra and others—see below,—will reign for sixty years; and then follows something quite unintelligible in my MS.

‡ In the Vāyu-purāṇa, the city is called Kānchanakā.

§ The Vāyu-purāṇa is anything but clear, hereabouts, in my MSS. It speaks—see the next note,—of Parapuranjaya (or Swarapuranjaya, according to three copies out of five); and he is said to be son of Śesha, king of the Nāgas. Vide supra, p. 210, note *.

|| I find, in the Vāyu-purāṇa:

शेषस्य नागराजस्य पुत्रः परपुरंजयः ।

The Brahmānda-purāṇa has the same verse.

¶ Three MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa have Dhanadharmā; the remaining two, Dhanadharmā.

 One MS. has तु; and so reads the Brahmānda-purāṇa. The resulting sense is “after the Śungas”.

three other Rajas,—Dauhitra,* Śísuka, and Ripukáyán.† These are called princes of Vidiśa or Videśa,‡—the latter meaning, perhaps, ‘foreign,’—and constitute the Nága dynasty. Our text calls Vindhyaśakti a Múrdhábhisikta, §—a warrior of a mixed race, sprung from a Brahman father and Kshattriya mother. ||

तेषां त्रयोदश सुता भवितारश्च बाल्हीकाः ।

“The Báhlikas will be their thirteen sons.” As the commentator: तेषां भूतनन्दादीनां यथायथं बाल्हीका नामानस्त्रयोदश सुता भविष्यन्ति । “There will be, severally, thirteen sons, called Báhlikas, of Bhútananda and the rest.” The following verse is:

पुष्पमित्रोऽथ राजन्यो दुर्मित्रोऽस्य तथैव च ।

“Pushpamitra, a king, and, then, Durmitra.” Who or what they were does not appear. The commentator says: “Pushpamitra

* Variants: Dauhityra and Daihitra.

† I find nothing like this name, but, in most of my MSS., Purikáya. The rest seem to speak of a city, Purikáyá. The Brahmánda-purána gives Purikáya.

‡ All my MSS. have Vaideśa, with Vaidiśaka as its adjective. One or other must be wrong.

§ The commentator explains this term, and rightly, by mukhya. He adds that there is a variant, मूर्धसिक्तः, which he explains by क्षत्रियमुखः ।

|| This is the definition of what is more ordinarily written múrdháva-sikta.

¶ Not one of my MSS. has anything but -पटुमित्रास्त्रयोदश । The Translator’s reading seems to be corrupted from a fragment of the comment: पुष्पमित्राद्यस्त्रयोदश । kings in the seven Kōśalas; and there will be as was another king; and Durmitra was his son:” अथ पुष्पमित्रो नामान्यो राजन्यः । अस्य च दुर्मित्रो नाम पुत्रः । Here is, evidently, careless and inaccurate compilation. The Vāyu, though not quite satisfactory, accords better with our text. “Pravīra,” it says, “will have four sons. When the Vindhya race is extinct, there will be three Bāhlika kings,—Supratika, Nabhīra, who will reign thirty years, and Śakyamānābhava* (quere this name), king of the Mahishas.† The Pushpamitras will then be, and the Patumitras, also, who will be seven kings of Mekalā. Such is the generation:”

 See note * in p. 215, infra.

पुष्पमित्रा भविष्यन्ति पटुमित्रास्तथैव च (or पटुमित्रास्तयोदश ¶) ।

मेकलायां नृपाः सप्त भविष्यन्तीति संततिः ॥ **

The plural verb, with only two Bāhlika names, indicates some omission; unless we correct it to भोक्ष्येते ‘they two will reign:’ but the following name and title, “Śakyamānābhava, king of the Mahishas,” seems to have little connexion with the Bāhlikas. If, in a subsequent part of the citation, the reading ‘trayodaśa’ be correct, it must, then, be thirteen Patumitras; but it will be difficult to know what to do with ‘sapta’, ‘seven.’ †† If, for ‘santa-

* See note ||, below.

† The Sanskrit cited requires ‘Mahishins’.

‡ One MS. has सुप्रतीकोऽत्र भारश्च, which gives Bhāra, instead of Nabhīra.

§ One of my MSS. gives त्रिंशतिः, the reading of the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa.

|| In one of my MSS., शक्यो नामाभवद्राजा; and the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, in my one copy, has साक्षो नामाभवद्राजा ।

¶ This is the only reading of my MSS.; and the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has the same.

 The Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa has the same verses, but, in my single MS., in a very corrupt form.

†† The seven kings of Mekalā are unnamed, as in our Purāṇa. As to the Pushpamitras and the Patumitras, the import is, probably, that tiḥ', we might read 'saptatiḥ', 'seventy', the sense might be, "these thirteen kings ruled for seventy-seven years.† However this may be, it seems most correct to separate the thirteen sons or families of the Vindhya princes from the three Bāhlikas, and them from the Pushpamitras and Paṭumitras, who governed Mekalā, a country on the Narmadā (see Vol. II., p. 160, note 4†). What the Bāhlikas (or princes of Balkh,) had to do in this part of India is doubtful. The Durmitra of the Bhāgavata has been conjectured, by Colonel Tod (Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. I., p. 325), to be intended for the Bactrian prince Demetrius: but it is not clear that even the Bhāgavata considers this prince as one of the Bāhlikas; and the name occurs nowhere else.

there were thirteen of the latter, while the number of the former is not mentioned. See the next note, near the end.

* On referring to the beginning of note 1 in p. 213, supra, it will be seen that the Translator has transcribed a part of the original of this passage. I repeat a few words there given, and continue the quotation: ततः पुष्पमित्रपटुमित्रास्त्रयोदश। मेकलास्य सप्त। कोशलायां तु नवैव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति। नैषधास्तु तावन्त एव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति। "Then the Pushpamitras and the Paṭumitras, thirteen, will reign; and the Mekalas will be seven; and there will be nine kings in Kośalā; and there will be just as many Naishadha kings." The comment is as follows: पुष्पमित्रादयस्त्रयोदश। मेकाला मेकलदेशजाः सप्त। कोशलायां नवैव। नैषधास्तावन्तो नवैव भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति।

Thus, it is not said where the Pushpamitras and the Paṭumitras—dynasties, probably, named from their founders, Pushpamitra and Paṭumitra,—will reign; there is no mention, as there is in the Vāyu-purāṇa of Mekalā; we are told nothing, here, of the Kośalas, but of the city of Kośalā; and the "seven" defines the number of the Mekala kings.

If we suppose that our text—which, here, is in prose, and, therefore, comparatively liable to vitiation, should read पुष्पमित्राश्च, it will harmonize with the Vāyu-purāṇa, in not defining the number of the Pushpamitras, and in recognizing the Paṭumitras as thirteen. Vide supra, p. 214, note ††.

One of my MSS. yields Mekalakas, for Mekalas.

† Such, owing to the word iti, could not be the sense, even if the reading were as it is suggested to alter it.

‡ The only Mekalā named there is a designation of the river Narmadā.

The three copies of the Váyu read Komalá, and call the kings the Meghas, "more strong than sapient:" §

कोमलायां॥ तु राजानो भविष्यन्ति महाबलाः ।

मेघा इति समाख्याता बुद्धिमन्तो न वै च ¶ तु ॥

The Bhágavata agrees with our text. The Váyu says, of the Naishadhas, or kings of Nishadha, that they were, all, of the race of Nala: नलवंशप्रसूताः । The Bhágavata adds two other races, seven Andhras (vide supra, p. 199, note 4), and kings of Vaidúra; with the remark, that these were, all, contemporaries; being, as the commentator observes, petty or provincial rulers,—खण्डमण्डलेषु भूपाः ।

In the extract from the Váyu-purāṇa in the note under annotation, there is mention, however, of a Mekalá,—a city, in all likelihood, and the capital of the Mekala kings of our text.

* Corrected from "Magadha", the Sanskrit being मगधायाम् । A city seems to be intended.

† The original does not designate him as such.

‡ Kaivarta. The word is, probably, here used in the sense of the offspring of Nisháda men and Áyogaví women. See the *Laws of the Mánava*s, X., 34.

§ From the correction made in note ¶, below, it comes out that the Meghas were 'both strong and sapient.'

¶ The proper and more ancient form is Kosalá,—with the dental sibilant; and, as स and म are frequently interchanged by careless scribes, there is no doubt that कोसलायां is the right word here. The Brahmánda-purāṇa has कौशलायां, yielding Kośalá.

¶ The correct reading, unquestionably, is that which I find, नवैव । The kings of Kosalá are, thus, said to be nine in number.

 Its words—XII., I., 33,—are:

¹ The Váyu has Viśwaspháñiṣ and Viśwasphíní; the Bhágavata, Viśwasphúrti, or, in some MSS., Viśwaphúrji. || The castes he establishes, or places in authority, to the exclusion of the Kshattriyas, are called, in all the copies of our text, Kaivartas, Patas, ¶ Pulindas, and Brahmans. The Váyu (three MSS.) has Kaivartas, Panchakas, Pulindas, and Brahmans:

कैवर्तीन्पञ्चकांश्च पुलिन्दान्प्राह्मणांस्तथा ।

The Bhágavata has Pulindas, Yadus, and Madrakas. The Váyu describes Viśwaspháñi as a great warrior, and, apparently, as a eunuch:

विश्वस्फाणिर्महासत्त्वो युद्धे विष्णुसमी बली ।

विश्वस्फाणिर्नरपतिः स्त्रीवाविक्रतिरुच्यते†† ॥

He worshipped the gods and manes, and, dying on the banks of the Ganges, went to the heaven of Indra:

जाह्नवीतीरमासाद्य शरीरं त्यज्यते बली ।

सन्वस्य स्वशरीरे तु शक्रलोकं गमिष्यति ॥‡

* The original says Yadus and Pulindas.

† Nágasena, called one of the Nágas, is mentioned in the Harsha-charita, and is said to have been slain at Padmávatí. See my Vásvadattá, Preface, p. 53. A Nágasena is named in the second inscription on the Allahabad pillar. See the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1837, p. 979; also, the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, Vol. VIII., p. 247.

‡ Variants: Kántipurí and Kántápuri. One of the best of my MSS. names the first only of the three cities in the text.

¹ Such appears to be the purport of our text: नव नागाः पद्मावत्यां कान्तिपुरीं मथुरायाम् । अनुगंगाप्रयागं मागधा गुप्ताश्च भोक्ष्यन्ति । ‡ The nine Nágas might be thought to mean the same as the descendants of Śesha Nága; but the Váyu has another series here, analogous to that of the text: “The nine Nāka kings will possess the city Champávati;§ and the seven Nágas(?)||, the pleasant city Mathurá. Princes of the Gupta race will possess all these countries, the banks of the Ganges to Prayága, and Sáketa, and Magadhá:” ¶

अनुगंगाप्रयागं च साकेतं मगधास्तथा ।
एताञ्जनपदान्सर्वान्भोक्ष्यन्ति गुप्तवंशजाः ॥

This account is the most explicit, and, probably, most accurate, of all. The Nākas were Rajas of Bhagulpoor; the Nágas, †† of Mathurá; and the intermediate countries, along the Ganges, ‡‡ were governed by the Guptas (or Rajas of the Vaiśya caste).

* See note ‡, below.

† For a peculiar reading of this passage, on the warrant of two MSS. consulted by the Reverend Dr. Mill, making the Magadhas and the Guptas rulers over the Magadhas, see the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1837, p. 10.

‡ The natural sense of these last words is: “The Magadhas and the Guptas will rule over Prayága on the Ganges.” Any place at the confluence of sacred rivers may be called Prayága.

§ In Colonel Wilford’s MS. excerpts, the text yields Padmávati, with which the Brahmánda-purāna agrees.

will reign, in a city on the sea-shore, over the Kosalas,

The Bhágavata* seems to have taken great liberties with the account; as it makes Viśwasphúrti king over Anugangá,—the course of the Ganges from Hurdwar† (according to the commentator,) to Prayága,—residing at Padmavati:‡

omitting the Nágas altogether, and converting 'gupta' into an epithet of 'mediní',—"the preserved (or protected) earth." Wilford|| considers the Nágas, Nákas, and Guptas to be, all, the same. He says: "Then came a dynasty of nine kings, called the nine Nágas, or Nákas. These were an obscure tribe, called, for that reason, Guptavamsás. There were nine families of them, who ruled, independent of each other, over various districts in Anugangá, such as Padmávati," &c. &c. That city he calls Patna; but, in the Málátí and Mádhava,¶ Padmávati lies amongst the Vindhya hills. Kántipurí he makes Cotwal, near Gwalior. The reading of the Váyu, Champávati, however, obviates the necessity of all vague conjecture. According to Wilford, there is a powerful tribe, still called Nákas, between the Jumna and the Betwa. Of the existence and power of the Guptas, however, we have recently had ample proofs, from inscriptions and coins, as in the Chandragupta and Samudragupta of the Allahabad column (Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, March and June, 1834), and Kumáragupta, Chandragupta, Samudragupta, Śásigupta, &c., on the Archer coins, found at Kanauj and elsewhere (Asiatic Re-

§ The only grammatical reading that I find—and it occurs in only one MSS.,—is as follows: कलिङ्गमाहिषकमाहिन्द्रान्भौमा गुहा भोच्यन्ति; which makes the rulers Guhas of Bhauma (?). This is, however, extremely doubtful. My copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa have Guha, in the singular; as if a person were intended. In the Mahābhārata, Sānti-parvan, śl. 7559, we read of the Guhas, a nation in the south of India, who, possibly, took their name from Guha, prince of the Nishādas, a friend of Rāma.

² The Váyu has sons of Mañidhánya for the ruling dynasty, but names the countries those of the Naishadhas, Yudakas,¶ Śáisikas, and Kálatoyakas.†† The first name applies to a tract of country near the Vindhya mountains, but the last, to a country in the north.‡‡ The west or southwest, however, is, probably, intended, in this place.

It is most probable that the people spoken of along with the Pauñdras or Pauñdrakas, in the *Laws of the Mánava*s and in the Mahábhárata, are the Andhras, not the Auñdras.

* Corrected from "Mahendra".

The Bhágavata omits all these specifications subsequent to the notice of Viśwasphúrti.

The ordinary reading, as known to me, is as follows: सौराष्ट्रावन्तिशूद्रानर्बुदमरुभूमिविषयांश्च ब्राह्मद्विजाभीरशूद्राद्या भोक्ष्यन्ति । “Outcastes, unregenerate tribes, Ábhíras, Śúdras, and such others will govern the Śauráshtras, the Avantis, and the Śúdras, and the regions of Arbuda and Marubhúmi.”

Several of my best MSS. yield, instead of Śúdras, as the name of a nation, Śúras. Both the Śúdras and the Śúras are found mentioned in association with the Ábhíras. See Vol. II., p. 133, note *; p. 184, note 1; and p. 185, notes 2 and *; also, p. 224, infra, note ‡.

After the Śúdras—the nation so called,—a single copy introduces the Ábhíras: and another copy has ‘mountaineers’, adrjá, in lieu of ‘unregenerate tribes’, adwija.

Ábhíra, equally with Śúdra, denotes a caste, as well as a people.

Śauráshtra—for which the Translator’s “Śaurashtra” must be exchanged, in order to obtain a recognized word,—cannot be substituted for Śuráshtra, whence Surat.

of the Indus, Dárvika, the Chandrabhágá, and Kásmíra.^{1*}

¹ From this we might infer that the Vishnú Purána was compiled when the Mohammedans were making their first encroachments on the west. They seem to have invaded, and to have settled, in Sindh early in the eighth century, although Indian princes continued on the Indus for a subsequent period: Scriptor. Arab. de Rebus Indicis, Gildemeister, p. 6. They were engaged in hostilities, in 698 or 700, with the prince of Kabul, in whose name, however disguised by its Mohammedan representations of Ratíl, Ratbal, or Ratibal, † it is not difficult to recognize the genuine Hindu appellation of Ratanpál or Ratnapála. Their progress in this direction has not been traced; but, at the period of their invasion of Sindh, they advanced to Multan, and, probably, established themselves there, and at Lahore, within a century. Cashmere they did not occupy till a much later date; and the Rája Tarangíní takes no notice of any attacks upon it. But the Chinese have recorded an application from the king of Cashmere, Chin-tho-lo-pi-li,—evidently the Chandrápída of the Sanskrit,—for aid against the Arabs, about A. D. 713: Gildemeister, p. 13. Although, therefore, not actually settled at the Punjab so early as the beginning, they had commenced their incursions, and had,

One of my MSS. has, instead of -दार्विको, -पर्यन्तो. On this reading, we must translate: “the regions of the Chandrabhága and of Kásmíra, as far as the banks of the Indus.”

My best copies of the commentary have the following: दार्विकीर्वी । देविकातटभवा भूमिः । The Dárviká river is, thus, identified with the Deviká. For the Deviká, see Vol. II., p. 144, text, and note 4; and p. 147, notes 2 and †.

The Translator's “Dárvika”, so far as I know, is nothing.

no doubt, made good their footing, by the end, of the eighth, or commencement of the ninth, century. This age of the Purāṇa is compatible with reference to the contemporary race of Gupta kings, from the fourth or fifth to the seventh or eighth century: * or, if we are disposed to go further back, we may apply the passage to the Greek and Indo-Scythian princes. It seems more likely to be the former period; but, in all such passages, in this or other Purāṇas, there is the risk that verses inspired by the presence of Mohammedan rulers may have been interpolated into the original text. Had the Mohammedans of Hindusthān, however, been intended by the latter, the indications would have been more distinct, and the localities assigned to them more central. Even the Bhāgavata, the date of which we have good reason for conjecturing to be the middle of the twelfth century, and which influenced the form assumed, about that time, by the worship of Vishṇu, cannot be thought to refer to the Mohammedan conquerors of Upper India. It is there stated that “rulers fallen from their castes, or Śūdras, will be the princes of Saurāshtra, Avanti, Ābhīra, Śūra, Arbuda, and Mālava;† and barbarians, Śūdras, and other outcastes, not enlightened by the Vedas, will possess Kāśmīra, Kauntī, and the banks of the Chandrabhāgā and Indus:”

per, and ever addicted to falsehood and wickedness. They will inflict death on women, children, and cows; they will seize upon the property of their subjects;* they will be of limited power, and will, for the most part, rapidly rise and fall: their lives will be short, their desires insatiable; and they will display but little piety. The people of the various countries intermingling with them will follow their example; and, the barbarians being powerful in the patronage of the princes, whilst purer tribes are neglected, the people will perish.¹ Wealth and piety will decrease day by day, parts of India, long before that time. (Account of Hindu Sects, Asiatic Researches, Vol. XVI.†) It cannot, therefore, allude to Mohammedans. By specifying the princes as seceders from the Vedas, there is no doubt that the barbarians and outcastes intended are so only in a religious sense; and we know, from indisputable authorities, that the western countries, Gujerat, Ábu, Málava, were the chief seats, first of the Buddhists, and, then, of the Jainas, from a period commencing, perhaps, before the Christian era, and scarcely terminating with the Mohammedan conquest. Inscriptions from Ábu; Asiatic Researches, Vol. XVI.

¹ The commentator, having, no doubt, the existing state of things in view, interprets the passage somewhat differently. The original is: तैश्च विमिश्रा जनपदास्तच्छीलवर्तिनी राजाश्चयशुष्मिणो स्नेच्छाश्चर्याश्चः विपर्ययेण वर्तमानाः प्रजाः क्षपयिष्यन्ति । The comment explains शुष्मिणः ‘strong’ (बलिनः), and adds: ‘the Mlechchhas will be in the centre, and the Áryas, at the end:’ स्नेच्छा मध्ये आर्याश्चान्ते इत्येतद्रूपेण; meaning, if any thing, that the unbelievers are in the heart of the country, and the Hindus, on the borders;—a description, however, never correct, except as applicable to the governments, and, in that case, inconsistent with the text, which had, previously, represented the bordering countries in the hands of outcastes and heretics. All that the text intends is, to represent infidels and foreigners high in power, and the Brahmans depressed. It is not unlikely that the reading is erroneous,—notwithstanding the copies concur,—and that the passage should be, here, the same as that of the Vāyu:

तैर्विमिश्रा जनपदा स्नेच्छाचाराश्च सर्वशः ।

विपर्ययेण वर्तन्ते नाशयिष्यन्ति वै प्रजाः ॥ †

“Intermixed with them, the nations, adopting, everywhere, barbaric institutions, exist in a state of disorder; and the subjects shall be destroyed;” the expression Mlechchháchárás cha‡ being used instead of Mlechchhás charyás cha. A passage similar to that of the text—noticing the intermixture of Hindús and barbarians,—occurs in a different place (see Vol. II., p. 130, note 1§), and designates the condition of India in all ages. At no period has the whole of the population followed Brahmanical Hinduism.

† The Matsya-purāṇa has:

तैर्विमिश्रा जनपदा आर्या स्नेच्छाश्च सर्वशः ।

विपर्ययेण वर्तन्ते क्षयमेष्यन्ति वै प्रजाः ॥

Herewith, as to the words आर्या स्नेच्छाः,—or आर्यस्नेच्छाः, as most MSS. of the Matsya-purāṇa read,—agrees the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, as known to me. One of my copies of the Vāyu-purāṇa, too, has आर्यस्नेच्छाः ।

“From your birth [Parikshit is addressed by Śuka,] to the inauguration of Nanda, 1115 years will elapse.

“Of the seven Rishis two are first perceived rising in the sky; and the asterism which is observed to be, at night, even with the middle of those two stars is that with which the Rishis are united; and they remain so during a hundred years of men. In your time, and at this moment, they are situated in Maghā.

“When the splendour of Vishṇu, named Kṛishṇa, departed for heaven, then did the Kali age, during which men delight in sin, invade the world. So long as he continued to touch the earth with his holy feet, so long the Kali age was unable to subdue the world.

“When the seven Rishis were in Maghā, the Kali age, comprising 1200 [divine] years [432,000 common years], began; and, when, from Maghā, they shall reach Pūrvāṣāḍhā, then will this Kali age attain its growth, under Nanda and his successors.”

This rendering is by Colebrooke, and will be found in his Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. II., pp. 356, 357; or Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 359.

पञ्चाशदुत्तरं; and of the Matsya five copies have the same, पञ्चाशदुत्तरं, or 1050 years, whilst one copy has 1500 years, पञ्चशतीत्तरम् । * The Bhágavata† has 1115 years:

एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु शतं पञ्चदशीत्तरम् । which the commentator explains, “a thousand years and a hundred with fifteen over”: वर्षसहस्रं पञ्चदशीत्तरं शतं च । He notices, nevertheless,—although he does not attempt to account for the discrepancy,—that the total period from Parikshit to Nanda was, actually, according to the duration of the different intermediate dynasties, as enumerated by all the authorities, fifteen centuries; viz.:

Magadha kings	1000 years.
Pradyota, &c.	138
Śiśunāga, &c.	362

1500 years.

The shorter period is best proportioned to the number of kings; for, reckoning from Sahadeva, (who was contemporary with Parikshit), and taking the number of the Bárhadrathas from the Matsya,‡ we have thirty-two of them, five of the Pradyota race,§ and ten Śaiśunāgas;|| or, in all, forty-seven, which, as the divisor of 1050, gives rather more than twenty-two years to a reign. The Váyu and the Matsya further specify the interval from Nanda to Pulomat (the last of the Andhra kings), as being 836¶ years; a total that does not agree exactly with the items previously specified :

* In Colonel Wilford's manuscript extract from the Brahmānda-purāna, the reading is पञ्चदशीत्तरं, thus making the period one of 1015 years.

† See note * in the preceding page.

9 Nandas	100 years.
10 Mauryas	137
10 Śungas	112
4 Kañwas	45
29 Andhras	460
<hr/> 62	<hr/> 854 years.

In either case, the average duration of reign is not improbable; as the highest number gives less than fourteen years to each prince. It is important to remember that the reign of Parikshit is, according to Hindu chronology, coeval with the commencement of the Kali age; and, even, therefore, taking the longest Paurāṇik interval, we have but sixteen centuries between Chandragupta,—or, considering him as the same with Sandrocoptos, nineteen centuries B. C.,—for the beginning of the Kali age. According to the chronology of our text, however, it would be but B. C. 1415; to that of the Vāyu and Matsya, B. C. 1450; and to that of the Bhāgavata, 1515. According to Colonel Wilford's computations (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., Chronological Table, p. 116), the conclusion of the Great War took place B. C. 1370. Buchanan conjectures it to have occurred in the thirteenth century B. C. Vyāsa was the putative father of Pāṇḍu and Dhṛitarāshṭra,* and, consequently, was contemporary with the heroes of the Great War. Mr. Colebrooke† infers, from astronomical data, that the arrangement of the Vedas, attributed to Vyāsa, took place in the fourteenth century B. C. Mr. Bentley brings the date of Yudhisṭhira, the chief of the Pāṇḍavas, to 575 B. C. (Historical View of the Hindu Astronomy, p. 67); but the weight of authority is in favour of the thirteenth or fourteenth century ary, in that conjunction, for a hundred years of men.¹ At the birth of Parikshit, they were in Maghá; and the Kali age then commenced, which consists of 1200 (divine) years. When the portion of Vishnú (that had been born from Vasudeva) returned to heaven, then

B. C., for the war of the Mahábhárata, and the reputed commencement of the Kali age.

¹ A similar explanation is given in the Bhágavata,* Váyu, and Matsya Puráñas; and like accounts, from astronomical writers, are cited by Mr. Colebrooke (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 358).† The commentator on the Bhágavata thus explains the notion: "The two stars (Pulaha and Kratu,) must rise or be visible before the rest; and whichever asterism is in a line south from the middle of those stars is that with which the seven stars are united; and so they continue for one hundred years."‡ Colonel Wilford has, also, given a like explanation of the revolution of the Řishis (Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 83). According to Bentley, the notion originated in a contrivance of the astronomers to show the quantity of the precession of the equinoxes: "This was by assuming an imaginary line, or great circle, passing through the poles of the ecliptic and the beginning of the fixed Maghá, which circle was supposed to cut some of the stars in the Great Bear. * * * *. The seven stars in the Great Bear being called the Řishis, the circle so assumed was called the line of the Řishis; and, being invariably fixed to the beginning of the lunar asterism Maghá, the precession would be noted by stating the degree &c. of any moveable lunar mansion cut by that fixed line or circle, as an index." Historical View of the Hindu Astronomy, p. 65.

* Vide supra, p. 230, note *.

† Or Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. II., p. 355.

‡ These are, mostly, Colebrooke's own words, a little altered. The Sanskrit is very much fuller. See the Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX., p. 360; or Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. II., p. 357.

the Kali age commenced. As long as the earth was touched by his sacred feet, the Kali age could not affect it. As soon as the incarnation* of the eternal VishŪu had departed, the son of Dharma, — Yudhishtira,† — with his brethren,‡ abdicated the sovereignty. Observing unpropitious portents, consequent upon Kṛishṇa's disappearance, he placed Parikshit upon the throne. When the seven Rishis are in Pūrvāshādhā, then Nanda will begin to reign;¹ and thenceforward the influence of the Kali will augment. §

¹ The Bhāgavata has the same; and this agrees with the period assigned for the interval between Parikshit and Nanda, of 1050 years; as, including Maghā, we have ten asterisms to Pūrvāshādhā, or 1000 years. The Vāyu and Matsya are so very inaccurate, in all the copies consulted, that it is not safe to affirm what they mean to describe. || Apparently, they state, that, at the end of the Andhra dynasty, the Rishis will be in Kṛittikā, which furnishes other ten asterisms; the whole being nearly in accordance with the chronology of the text; as the total interval from Parikshit to the last of the Andhras is $1050 + 836 = 1886$; and the entire century of each asterism, at the beginning and end of the series, need not be taken into account. The copies of the Matsya read:

† Vide supra, pp. 102 and 159.

The interesting passages thus referred to, consisting of some ten stanzas in each Purāṇa, and of about as many in the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa, are so extremely corrupt, in all my MSS., that I am unable to cite them. Specimens of what I find in my copies will be seen in notes in the two following pages.

The day that Kṛishná shall have departed from the earth will be the first of the Kali age, the duration of

सप्तर्षयस्तथा ते स्युः प्रदीप्तेनाग्निना * समम् ।

“The seven Rishis are on a line with the brilliant Agni;” that is, with Kṛittiká, of which Agni is the presiding deity.† The Váyu intends, in all probability, the same phrase; but the three copies have प्रतीये राज्ञि, ‡ a very unintelligible clause. Again, it seems as if they intended to designate the end of the Andhra race as the period of a complete revolution, or 2700 years; for the Váyu has:

सप्तविंशैः शतैर्भवित्वा अन्ध्राणान्तेऽन्वया पुनः ।§

“The races at the end of the Andhras will be after 2700 years.” The Matsya has:

सप्तविंशतिः भावेन अन्ध्राणान्तेन्वकात् (?) पुनः ॥

* Corrected, on the authority of all my MSS., from प्रदीप्ताग्निना, which breaks the metre.

† Whence Kṛittiká has Ágneya as a synonym. See Vol. II., p. 277, ad calcem.

‡ The text of the Váyu-purána is, evidently, somewhat corrupt. hereabouts; but, in the context of the passage from which these words are taken, the computations are retrograde. Thus, we read:

महापद्माभिषेकात्तु जन्म यावत्परिचितः ।

एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु ज्ञेयं पञ्चाशदुत्तरम् ॥

All my MSS. have, to be sure, at the beginning of this stanza, महादेवाभिषेकात् । But the Matsya-purána and the Brahmánda-purána furnish the restoration of what is, without question, the true lection.

§ This line is immetrical and ungrammatical, and says nothing of “the end of the Andhras”. My best MSS. have:

सप्तविंशैः शतैर्भाव्या अन्ध्राणां तेऽन्वयाः पुनः ।

The corresponding verse of the Brahmánda-purána is, in my sole copy, crowded with mistakes of transcription.

|| I can but partially amend this incorrect verse by the aid of my MSS. One of them ends it with अन्ध्राणां त्वन्वयः पुनः । The Brahmánda-purána gives, at its close: तेऽन्वयः पुनः । Compare the reading in the note immediately preceding.

which you shall hear: it will continue for 360.000 years of mortals. After twelve hundred divine years shall have elapsed, the Kṛita age shall be renewed.

Thus, age after age, Brahman, Kshatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, excellent Brahman, men of great souls, have passed away by thousands, whose names, and a passage which, though repeated in the MSS., is, obviously, most inaccurate; although it might, perhaps, be understood to intimate that the Ṛishis will be in the twenty-fourth asterism after the Andhra race: but that would give only 1400 years from Parikshit to Pulomat; whilst, if the twenty-fourth from Maghā was intended, it would give 2400 years; both periods being incompatible with previous specifications. The Matsya has a different reading of the second line, but one not much more satisfactory:

ब्राह्मणास्तु चतुर्विंशे भविष्यन्ति शतं समाः ।

"A hundred years of Brahmā will be in the twenty-fourth (asterism?)." In neither of these authorities, however, is it proposed, by the last-cited passages, to illustrate the chronology of princes or dynasties. The specification of the period, whatever it may be, is that of the era at which the evil influence of the Kali age is to become most active and irresistible.

* All my MSS. have पारिक्षिते; and शतं ends the verse, in one of them. So, perhaps, the Matsya-purāṇa is intended to read; and so the Vāyu-purāṇa and the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa actually do read, according to my copies.

† शतं समाः is, probably, the correct reading of the end of this verse. My best MSS. give, at its beginning, अन्धांशे । and other kings, who, with perishable frames, have possessed this ever-during world, and who, blinded with deceptive notions of individual occupation, have indulged the feeling that suggests "This earth is mine—it is my son's—it belongs to my dynasty," have, all, passed away. So, many who reigned before them, many who succeeded them, and many who are yet to come, have ceased, or will cease, to be. Earth laughs, as if smiling with autumnal flowers, to behold her kings unable to effect the subjugation of themselves.* I will repeat to you, Maitreya, the stanzas that were chanted by Earth, and which the Muni Asita† communicated to Janaka, whose banner was virtue: "How great is the folly of princes, who are endowed with the faculty of reason, to cherish the confidence of ambition, when they themselves are but foam upon the wave! Before they have subdued themselves, they seek to reduce their ministers, their servants, their subjects, under their authority; they then endeavour to overcome their foes.‡ 'Thus', say they, 'will we conquer the ocean-circled earth', and, intent upon their project, behold not death, which is not far off. It is through infatuation* that kings desire to possess me, whom their predecessors have been forced to leave, whom their fathers have not retained. Beguiled by the selfish love of sway, fathers contend with sons, and brothers with brothers, for my possession.† Foolishness has been the character of every king who has boasted 'All this earth is mine—everything is mine—it will be in my house for ever'; for he is dead. How is it possible that such vain desires should survive in the hearts of his descendants, who have seen their progenitor, absorbed by the thirst of dominion, compelled to relinquish me, whom he called his own, and tread the path of dissolution?‡ When I hear a king sending word to another, by his ambassador, 'This earth is mine; immediately resign (your pretensions to) it,' I am moved to violent laughter, (at first); but it soon subsides, in pity for the infatuated fool."

These were the verses, Maitreya, which Earth recited, and by listening to which, ambition§ fades away, like snow before the sun. I have now related to you the whole (account of the) descendants of the Manu, amongst whom have flourished kings endowed with

BOOK V.

CHAPTER I.

The death of Kaṁsa announced. Earth, oppressed by the Daityas, applies to the gods. They accompany her to Viṣṇu, who promises to give her relief. Kaṁsa imprisons Vasudeva and Devakī. Viṣṇu's instructions to Yoganidrā.

MAITREYA.¹—You have related to me a full account of all the different dynasties of kings, and of their

¹ The whole of this Book is dedicated to the biography of Kṛishṇa. Many of the Purāṇas omit this subject altogether, or only allude to it occasionally. In others, it is equally prominent. The Brahma Purāṇa gives the story exactly in the same words as our text. Which has the best right to them may be questioned; but, as it is usually met with, the Brahma Purāṇa is a very heterogeneous compilation. The Hari Vaṁśa has a narrative more detailed than that of the text, with additions and embellishments of its own. The Brahma Vaivarta, throughout, celebrates the acts of Kṛishṇa; and one portion of it, the Kṛishṇa Janma Khaṇḍa, especially describes his boyhood and youth. The incidents are the same, in general, as those in the text; but they are lost amidst interminable descriptions of Kṛishṇa's sports with the Gopīs, and with his mistress Rādhā,—a person not noticed elsewhere: the whole is in a style indicative of a modern origin. The Agni Purāṇa and Padma Purāṇa (Uttara Kāṇḍa) have accounts of Kṛishṇa; but they are mere summaries, compiled, evidently, from other works. The principal authority for the adventures of Kṛishṇa is the Bhāgavata, the tenth Book of which successive transactions. I wish, now, to hear a more particular description, holy Řishi,* of the portion of Vishŭ¹ that came down upon earth, and was born in is exclusively devoted to him. It is this work which has, no doubt, mainly extended the worship of Křishŭa; as its popularity is evinced by its having been translated into all the spoken languages of India professing to have a literature. The Prem-sāgar, its Hindī version, is well known; but there are, also, translations in Marāthī, Telugū, Tāmil, &c. It does not seem likely, however, that the Vishŭ Purāna has copied the Bhāgavata; for, although its greater conciseness may, sometimes, look like abridgment, yet the descriptions are, generally, of a more simple and antiquated character. Here, as usual, the Mahābhārata is, no doubt, the earliest extant authority: but it is not the earliest; for, whilst it omits to narrate most of his personal adventures unconnected with his alliance with the Pāndavas, it often alludes to them, and names, repeatedly, his capital, his wives, and his progeny. It also devotes a section, the Mausāla Parvan, to the destruction of the Yādavas. The story of Křishŭa, the prince and hero, must have been complete, when the Mahābhārata was compiled. It is doubtful, however, if Křishŭa, the boy, and his adventures at Vřindāvana, were not subsequent inventions. There are no allusions to them, in the poem, of an unsuspicious nature. The only ones that I have met with are contained in a speech by Śiřupāla,†—Sabhā Parvan, Vol. I., p. 360,—in which he reviles Křishŭa; but they may easily have been interpolated. There may be others scattered through the poem; but I have not observed them.

¹ The notices of Křishŭa's origin and character, in various passages of the Mahābhārata, are by no means consistent, and indicate different dates, at least. In an address to him by Arjuna,—Vana Parvan, Vol. I., p. 426,—he is said to have passed thousands of years in various holy places, engaged in arduous the family of Yadu. Tell me, also, what actions he* performed in his descent, as a part of a part of the Supreme, upon the earth.¹

penances. He is frequently identified with the Rishi Nārāyaṇa; or he and Arjuna are said to be Nārāyaṇa and Nara:†

त्वं चैवाहं च क्रीन्ते च नरनारायणौ स्मृतौ । ‡

In the Dāna-dharma, he is represented as a worshipper of Śiva, and propitiating him and his wife Umā, and receiving, as boons, from them, wives and children.§ As a warrior and prince, he is always on the scene; but he is, repeatedly, called an Amśa (or portion) of Vishṇu; whilst, in a great number of places, he is identified with Vishṇu or Nārāyaṇa, and is, consequently, 'all things.' This latter is his character, of course, amongst the Vaishṇavas, agreeably to the text of the Bhāgavata: कृष्णस्तु भगवान्स्वयं, "Kṛishṇa is the lord (Vishṇu) himself."

¹ This is a still further diminution of Kṛishṇa's dignity: he is not even a part, but 'a part of a part,' Amśamśavatāra (अंश-शवतार). But this, the commentator maintains, is to be understood only of his form or condition as man, not of his power; as it suffered no diminution, either in its primary or secondary state,—as light, by suffusion, suffers no decrease; and a verse of the Veda is cited to this effect: "Though that which is full be taken from what is full, yet the remainder is undiminished:"

पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते । ॥

"Kṛishṇa is, nevertheless, the very supreme Brahma; though it be a mystery how the Supreme should assume the form of a man:"

PARĀŚARA.—I will relate to you, Maitreya, the account which you have requested;—the birth of a part of a part of Vishŋu, and the benefits which his actions conferred upon the world.*

Vasudeva formerly married the daughter of Devaka, the illustrious Devakī,† a maiden of celestial beauty.‡ After their nuptials, Kaṁsa, the increaser of the race of Bhoja, drove their car, as their charioteer. As they were going along, a voice in the sky, sounding aloud, and deep as thunder, addressed Kaṁsa, and said: "Fool that you are, the eighth child of the damsel whom you are driving in the car shall take away your life."§ On hearing this, Kaṁsa drew his sword, and was about to put Devakī to death; but Vasudeva interposed, saying: "Kill not Devakī, great warrior. Spare her life;

So the Bhāgavata,|| in one passage, predicts that the Para-purusha (Purushottama, or Vishŋu,) will be born, visibly, in the dwelling of Vasudeva:

† The Bhāgavata tells the circumstance as in the text. The Hari Vamśa makes Nārada apprise Kaṁsa of his danger. Nārada's interposition is not mentioned until afterwards, by our authority. Devakī is the cousin of Kaṁsa. Vide supra, p. 98.

At that time, Earth, overburthened by her load, repaired to Mount Meru, to an assembly of the gods, and, addressing the divinities, with Brahmá at their head, related, in piteous accents, all her distress. "Agni," said Earth, "is the progenitor of gold; Súrya, of rays of light.¹ The parent and guide^{} of me, and of all spheres, is the supreme† Náráyaṇa, who is Brahmá, the lord of the lord of patriarchs; the eldest of the eldest-born; one with minutes and hours;‡ one with time; having form, though indiscrete. When the gods had heard these complaints of Earth, Brahmá, at their request, explained to them how her burthen might be lightened. "Celestials," said Brahmá, "all that Earth has said is, undoubtedly, true. The unborn, universal Hari, having heard, with his mental ear,† these eulogiums, was pleased, and thus spake to Brahmá: "Tell me, Brahmá, what you and the gods desire. cause." The term 'no cause' may, the commentator says, designate fixed prescribed duties, the Nitya-karman; 'cause' may signify occasional sacrifices, the Kámya-karman: neither of these can form any necessity for Vishnú's descent, as they might of a mere mortal's being born on the earth. Or, Káraña is explained to mean 'obtaining pleasure', from Ka (क्) and Araña (अरण), 'obtaining'; obtaining happiness, or the cause of it, piety, virtue (धर्म); and, with the negative, Akáraña (अकारण), the reverse, pain, the consequence of wickedness (अधर्म). The purport is clear enough: it is merely meant to state, that Vishnú is not subject to the necessity which is the cause of human birth.

This my (black) hair shall be impersonated in the eighth conception of the wife of Vasudeva, Devakī,—who is like a goddess,—and shall slay Kaṁsa, who is the demon Kálanemi.” Thus having spoken, Hari disappeared; and the gods, bowing to him, though invisible, returned to the summit of Mount Meru, from whence they descended upon earth.†

The Muni Nárada informed Kaṁsa that the supporter of the earth, Vishṇu,‡ would be the eighth child of Devakī; and, his wrath being excited by this report, he placed both Vasudeva and Devakī in confinement. Agreeably to his promise, the former delivered to Kaṁsa each infant, as soon as it was born. It is said that these, to the number of six, were the children of the demon Hiraṇyakaśipu,§ who were introduced into the womb (of Devakī), at the command of Vishṇu,

Or, the birth of Ráma and Kṛishṇa was a double illusion, typified by the two hairs.” This seems to be a refinement upon an older and somewhat undignified account of the origin of Kṛishṇa and his brother. The commentator on the Mahábhárata argues that they are to be understood merely as the media by which Devakī and Rohiṇí conceived.

THE nurse of the universe, (Jagaddhātrī,) thus en-joined by the god of gods, conveyed the six several embryos (into the womb of Devakī¹), and transferred the seventh, (after a season,) to that of Rohiṇī; after which, Hari, for the benefit of the three regions, became incarnate, as the conception of the former princess, and Yoganidrā, as that of Yaśodā, exactly as the supreme Vishṇu* had commanded. When the portion of Vishṇu had become incorporate upon earth, the planetary bodies moved in brilliant order in the heavens, and the seasons were regular and genial.† “No person could bear to gaze upon Devakī, from the light (that invested her); and those who contemplated her radiance felt their minds disturbed. Birth of Kṛishṇa; conveyed, by Vasudeva, to Mathurā, and exchanged with the new-born daughter of Yaśodā. Kāṁsa attempts to destroy the latter, who becomes Yoganidrā.

THUS eulogized by the gods, Devakī bore, in her womb, the lotos-eyed (deity), the protector of the world. The sun of Achyuta rose in the dawn of Devakī, to cause the lotos-petal of the universe to expand. On the day of his birth, the quarters of the horizon were irradiate with joy, as if moonlight was diffused over the whole earth.* The virtuous experienced new delight, the strong winds were hushed, and the rivers glided tranquilly, when Janārdana was about to be born. The seas,† with their own melodious murmurings, made the music, whilst the spirits and the nymphs of heaven danced and sang; the gods, walking the sky, showered down flowers upon the earth; and the (holy) fires glowed with a mild and gentle flame. At midnight, when the supporter of all was about to be born, the clouds emitted low pleasing sounds, and poured down rain of flowers.

As soon as Ānakadundubhi‡ beheld the child, of the complexion of the lotos-leaves, having four arms, and the (mystic mark) Śrīvatsa on his breast, he addressed him in terms of love and reverence, and represented the fears he entertained of Kaiṁsa. "Thou art born," said Vasudeva, "O sovereign god of gods, bearer of the shell, the mace, and the discus; but, now, in mercy, withhold this thy celestial form; for Kaiṁsa will, assuredly, put me to death, when he knows that thou hast descended in my dwelling." Devakī, also, exclaimed: "God of gods, who art all things, who comprisest all the regions of the world in thy person,* and who, by thine illusion, hast assumed the condition of an infant, have compassion upon us, and forego this thy four-armed shape; nor let Kaiṁsa, the impious son of Diti, know of thy descent."

To these applications Bhagavat answered, and said: "Princess, in former times, I was prayed to by thee, and adored, in the hope of progeny. Thy prayers have been granted; for I am born thy son."† So saying, he was silent. And Vasudeva, taking the babe, went out, that same night: for the guards were, all, charmed by Yoganidrā, as were the warders at the gates of Mathurā; and they obstructed not the passage of Ānakadundubhi. To protect the infant from the heavy rain that fell from the clouds of night, Śeṣha, (the many-headed serpent), followed Vasudeva, and spread his hoods (above their heads); and, when the prince, with the child in his arms, crossed the Yamunā river, deep as it was, and dangerous with numerous whirlpools, the waters were stilled, and rose not above his knee.* On the bank he saw Nanda and the rest, who had come thither to bring tribute due to Kāṁsa; but they beheld him not.† At the same time, Yaśodā was, also, under the influence of Yoganidrā, whom she had brought forth, as her daughter, and whom (the prudent) Vasudeva took up, placing his son in her place, by the side of the mother. He then quickly returned home. When Yaśodā awoke, she found that she had been delivered of a boy, as black as the dark leaves of the lotos; and she was greatly rejoiced.

Vasudeva, bearing off the female infant (of Yaśodā), reached his mansion, (unobserved, and entered), and placed the child in the bed of Devakī. He then remained as usual. The guards were awakened by the cry of the new-born babe; and, starting up, they sent word to Kāṁsa, that Devakī had borne a child. Kāṁsa immediately repaired to the residence of Vasudeva, where he seized upon the infant. In vain Devakī convulsively entreated him to relinquish the child.‡ He

He is born who shall kill thee,—the mighty one amongst the gods, who was, formerly, thy destroyer. Now quickly secure him, and provide for thine own welfare." CHAPTER IV.

Kaṁsa addresses his friends, announces their danger, and orders male children to be put to death.

KAMSA, much troubled in mind, summoned all his principal Asuras,—Pralamba, Keśin, and the rest,—and said to them: “O valiant chiefs, Pralamba, Mahābāhu,* Keśin, Dhenuka, Pūtanā, Arishṭa, and all the rest of you, hear my words. The vile and contemptible denizens of heaven are assiduously plotting against my life;† for they dread my prowess. But, heroes, I hold them of no account. What can the impotent Indra or the ascetic‡ Hara perform? Or what can Hari accomplish, except the murder of his foes by fraud?§ What have we to fear from the Ādityas, the Vasus, the Agnis, or any others of the immortals, who have, all, been vanquished by my resistless arms? Have I not seen the king of the gods, when he had ventured into the conflict, quickly retreat from the field, receiving my shafts upon his back,—not, bravely, upon his breast? When, in resentment, he withheld the fertilizing showers from my kingdom, did not my arrows compel the clouds to part with their waters, as much as were required? Are not all the monarchs of the earth in terror Let, therefore, active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth; and let every boy in whom there are signs of unusual vigour be slain (without remorse).”

Having issued these commands, Kāṁsa retired into his palace, and liberated Vasudeva and Devakī from their captivity. “It is in vain,” said he to them, “that

CHAPTER V.

Nanda returns, with the infants, Kṛishṇa and Balarāma, to Gokula.

Pūtana killed by the former. Prayers of Nanda and Yaśodā.

WHEN Vasudeva was set at liberty, he went to the waggon of Nanda, and found Nanda there, rejoicing that a son was born to him.¹ Vasudeva spake to him kindly, and congratulated him on having a son in his old age. "The yearly tribute," he added, "has been paid to the king; and men of property should not tarry (near the court), when the business that brought them there has been transacted.* Why do you delay, now that your affairs are settled? Up, Nanda, quickly, and set off to your own pastures;† and let this boy, the son whom Rohiṇī has borne me, accompany you, and be brought up, by you, as this your own son." Accordingly, Nanda and the other cowherds, their goods being placed in their waggons, and their taxes having been paid to the king, returned (to their village).

¹ It is, literally, 'went to the cart' or 'waggon,' नन्दस्य शकटं गतः; as if Nanda and his family dwelt in such a vehicle, as the Scythians are said to have done. The commentator explains Śakata (शकट) "the place of loosing or unharnessing the waggon," शकटावमोचनस्थानम् । In the Bhāgavata,‡ Vasudeva does not quit Mathurā, but goes to the halting-ground of Nanda, who has come to that city, to pay his taxes: ययौ तदवमोचनं; explained by the comment तस्य वसतिस्थानं शकटोत्तारभूमिम् ।

Some time after they were settled at Gokula, (the female fiend) Pútaná, the child-killer, came thither, by night, and, finding (the little) Kṛishná asleep, took him up, and gave him her breast to suck.¹ Now, whatever child is suckled, in the night, by Pútaná instantly dies; but Kṛishná, laying hold of the breast with both hands, sucked it with such violence, that he drained it of the life;* and the hideous † Pútaná, roaring aloud, and giving way in every joint, ‡ fell on the ground, expiring. The inhabitants of Vraja awoke, in alarm, at the cries of the fiend, (ran to the spot, and) beheld Pútaná lying on the earth, and Kṛishná in her arms. Yaśodá, snatching up Kṛishná, waved over him a cow-tail brush, to guard him from harm, whilst Nanda placed (dried) cow-dung (powdered,) upon his head. He gave him, also, an amulet;² saying, at the same time: "May Hari, Kṛishṇa overturns a waggon: casts down two trees. The Gopas depart to Vṛindāvana. Sports of the boys. Description of the season of the rains.

ON one occasion, whilst Madhusūdana was asleep underneath the waggon, he cried for the breast; and, kicking up his feet, he overturned the vehicle; and all the pots and pans* were upset and broken. The cowherds and their wives (hearing the noise,) came, exclaiming: "Ah! ah!" And there they found the child sleeping on his back. "Who could have upset the waggon?" said the cowherds. "This child," replied some boys, (who witnessed the circumstance). "We saw him," said they, "crying, and kicking the waggon with his feet; and so it was overturned. No one else had anything to do with it." The cowherds were exceedingly astonished at this account; and Nanda, not knowing what to think, took up the boy; whilst Yaśodā offered worship to the broken pieces of pots and to the waggon, with curds, flowers, fruit, and unbruised grain.†

The initiatory rites requisite for the two boys were performed by Garga,‡ who was sent to Gokula, by Vasudeva, for that purpose. He celebrated them without the knowledge of the cowherds;¹ and the wise sage, eminent amongst the wise, named the elder of them Rāma, and the other, Kṛishṇa. In a short time, they began to crawl about the ground, supporting themselves on their hands and knees, and creeping everywhere, often amidst ashes and filth. Neither Rohiṇī nor Yaśodā was able to prevent them from getting into the cow-pens, or amongst the calves, where they amused themselves by pulling their tails. As they disregarded the prohibitions of Yaśodā, and rambled about together constantly, she became angry, and, taking up a stick, followed them, and threatened the dark-complexioned Kṛishṇa with a whipping.* Fastening a cord round his waist, she tied him to the wooden mortar;² and, being in a great passion, she said to him: "Now, you naughty boy, get away from hence, if you can." She then went about her domestic affairs. As soon as she

² The Ulūkhalā (or mortar) is a large wooden bowl, on a solid stand of timber; both cut out of one piece. had departed, the lotos-eyed Kṛishṇa, endeavouring to extricate himself, pulled the mortar after him, to the space between two Arjuna-trees that grew near together. Having dragged the mortar between these trees, it became wedged awry there; and, as Kṛishṇa pulled it through, it pulled down the trunks of the trees.* Hearing the crackling noise, the people of Vraja came to see what was the matter; and there they beheld the two large trees, with shattered stems and broken branches, prostrate on the ground, with the child fixed between them, with a rope round his belly, laughing, and showing his white little teeth, just budded. It is hence that Kṛishṇa is called Dāmodara,—from the binding of the rope (dāman) round his belly (udara).¹† The elders of the cowherds, with Nanda at their head, looked upon these circumstances with alarm, considering them as of evil omen.‡ “We cannot remain in this place,” said they. “Let us go to some other (part of the) forest; for here many evil signs threaten us with destruction:—the death of Pūtana, the upsetting of the waggon, and the fall of the trees without their being blown down by the wind. Let us depart hence, without delay, and go to Vṛindāvana, where terrestrial prodigies may no more disturb us."

Having thus resolved, the inhabitants of Vraja communicated their intention to their families, and desired them to move without delay. Accordingly, they set off, with their waggons and their cattle, driving before them their bulls, and cows, and calves.* The fragments of their household stores they threw away; and, in an instant, Vraja was overspread with flights of crows. Vṛindāvana was chosen by Kṛishṇa,—whom acts do not affect,†—for the sake of providing for the nourishment of the kine; for there, in the hottest season, the new grass springs up as verdantly as in the rains. Having repaired, then, from Vraja to Vṛindāvana, the inhabitants of the former drew up their waggons in the form of a crescent.‡

¹ The Hari Vamśa, § not satisfied with the prodigies which had alarmed the cowherds, adds another, not found, it is believed, anywhere else. The emigration, according to that work, originates, not with the Gopas, but the two boys, who wish to go to Vṛindāvana; and, in order to compel the removal, Kṛishṇa converts the hairs of his body into hundreds of wolves, who so harass and alarm the inhabitants of Vraja, that they determine to abandon their homes.

CHAPTER VII.

Kṛishṇa combats the serpent Káliya: alarm of his parents and companions: he overcomes the serpent, and is propitiated by him: commands him to depart from the Yamuná river to the ocean.

ONE day, Kṛishṇa, unaccompanied by Ráma, went to Vṛindávana, He was attended by (a troop of) cowherds, and gaily decorated with wild flowers. On his way, he came to the Yamuná,* which was flowing in sportive undulations, and sparkling with foam, as if with smiles, as the waves dashed against the borders. Within its bed, however, was the fearful pool of the serpent Káliya,†—boiling with the fires of poison,—¹‡ from the fumes of which, large trees upon the bank were blighted, and by whose waters, when raised, by a gale, into the air, birds were scorched. Beholding this dreadful (lake), which was like another mouth of death, Madhusúdana reflected, that the wicked and poisonous Káliya, who had been vanquished by him—

¹ The commentator says, this means nothing more than that the waters of the pool were hot: विषामिना शृतं तप्तवारि यस्मिन् ।§ I do not know if hot springs have been found in the bed, or on the borders, of the Jumna. The hot well of Sítá-kuṇḍ, near Mongir, is not far from the Ganges.

Such being the case, he determined to dislodge the Nága, and enable the dwellers of Vraja to frequent the vicinage without fear:* for it was the especial purpose, he considered, of his descent upon earth, to reduce to subjection all such violators of law. "Here," thought he, "is a Kadamba-tree, which is sufficiently near. I can climb up it, and thence leap into the serpent's pool." Having thus resolved, he bound his clothes† tightly about him, and jumped, boldly,‡ into the lake of the serpent-king. The waters, agitated by his plunge amidst them, were scattered to a considerable distance from the bank; and, the spray falling upon the trees, they were immediately set on fire by the heat of the poisonous vapour combined with the water; and the whole horizon was in a blaze.§ Kṛishṇa, having dived into the pool, struck his arms in defiance;¹ and the snake-

Kṛishṇa's companions, beholding him in the lake, encompassed by the snakes twining around him, ran off to Vraja, lamenting and bewailing aloud his fate.† “Kṛishṇa,” they called out, “has foolishly plunged into the serpent's pool, and is there bitten to death by the snake-king. Thus reminded (of his real character, by Rāma), Kṛishṇa smiled gently, and (speedily) extricated himself from the coils of the snakes. Laying hold of the middle hood of their chief with both his hands, he bent it down, and set his foot upon the hitherto unbended head, and danced upon it in triumph. Wherever the snake attempted to raise his head, it was again trodden down; and many bruises were inflicted on the hood, by the pressure of the toes of Kṛishṇa.* Trampled upon by the feet of Kṛishṇa, as they changed position in the dance, the snake fainted, and vomited forth much blood.¹ Beholding the head and neck of their lord thus injured, and the blood flowing (from his mouth), the females† of the snake-king implored the clemency of Madhusūdana. "Thou art recognized, O god of gods!" they exclaimed. "Thou art the sovereign of all; thou art light supreme, inscrutable; thou art the mighty lord,‡ the portion of that (supreme light). The Thy own clemency must, alone, influence thy mind to show me compassion. It is the nature of snakes to be savage; and I am born of their kind. Hence, this is my nature, not mine offence. The demon Dhenuka destroyed by Rāma.

AGAIN, tending upon the herds, Rāma and Keśava* wandered through the woods, and (on one occasion), came to a pleasing grove of palms, where dwelt the fierce demon† Dhenuka,‡ feeding upon the flesh of deer.§ Beholding the trees covered with fruit, and desirous of gathering it, the cowherds called out (to the brothers), and said: "See, Rāma; see, Kṛishṇa! In this grove, belonging to the great Dhenuka, the trees are loaded with ripe fruit, the smell of which perfumes the air. We should like to eat some. Will you throw some down?"|| As soon as the boys had spoken, San-karshaṇa and Kṛishṇa (shook the trees, and) brought down the fruit on the ground. Hearing the noise of the falling fruit, the fierce¶ and malignant demon (Dhenuka), in the form of an ass, hastened to the spot, in a (great) passion, and began to kick Rāma†† on the

Rāma,* however, seized him by both hind legs, and, whirling him round, until he expired, tossed his carcass to the top of a palm-tree, from the branches of which it struck down abundance of fruit, like rain-drops poured upon earth by the wind.† The animals that were of kin to Dhenuka came running to his aid; but Kṛishná and Rāma‡ treated them in the same manner,§ until the trees were laden with dead asses,|| and the ground was strewed with ripe fruit. Henceforward, the cattle grazed, unobstructed, in the palm-grove, and cropped the new pasturage, where they had never before ventured.¹

Sports of the boys in the forest. Pralamba, the Asura, comes amongst them: is destroyed by Ráma, at the command of Kṛishná.

WHEN the demon in the form of an ass, and all his tribe,* had been destroyed, the grove of palms became the favourite resort of the Gopas and their wives;† and the sons of Vasudeva, greatly pleased, repaired to the Bháńdíra fig-tree.‡ They continued to wander about, shouting, and singing, and gathering fruits and flowers from the trees; now driving the cows afar to pasture; now calling them by their names; now carrying the foot-ropes of the kine upon their shoulders; now ornamenting themselves with garlands of forest-flowers. They looked like two young bulls, when the horns first appear.§ Attired, the one in yellow, and the other, in sable garments, they looked like two clouds, one white, and one black, surmounted by the bow of Indra.¶ Sporting, mutually, with frolics beneficial to the world, they roamed about, like two monarchs over all the collected sovereigns of the earth. Assuming human duties, and maintaining the human character, they strayed through the thickets, amusing themselves with sports suited to their mortal species and condition, in swinging on the boughs of trees,* or in boxing, and wrestling,† and hurling stones.

Having observed the two lads thus playing about, the Asura Pralamba, seeking (to devour) them, came amongst the cowherd boys, in the shape of one of themselves, and mixed, without being suspected, in their pastimes;‡ for he thought, that, thus disguised, it would not be difficult to find an opportunity to kill, first, Kṛishṇa, and, afterwards, the son of Rohiṇī.§ The boys commenced playing at the game of leaping like deer, two and two together.¹|| Govinda was matched with Śrīdāman,¶ and Balarāma, with Pralamba:

¹ Jumping with both feet at once,—as deer bound,—two boys together. The one that holds out longest, or comes to a given point first, is the victor; and the vanquished is then bound to carry him to the goal, if not already attained, and back again to the starting-post, on his shoulders. The Bhāgavata does not specify the game, but mentions that the vanquished carry the victors on their backs.

Balaráma, ¶ beholding him like a scorched mountain,—his head crowned with a diadem, and his neck hung round with garlands, having eyes as large as cart-wheels, a fearful form, and shaking the earth with his tread,—called out, as he was carried away, to his brother: "Kṛishná, Kṛishná, I am carried off by some demon, disguised as a cowherd, and huge as a mountain. What shall I do? Description of autumn. Kṛishṇa dissuades Nanda from worshipping Indra: recommends him and the Gopas to worship cattle and the mountains.

WHILST Rāma and Keśava were sporting, thus, in Vraja, the rainy season ended, and was succeeded by the season of autumn, when the lotos is full-blown. The (small) Śapharī fish, in their watery burrows,* were oppressed by the heat, like a man by selfish desires, who is devoted to his family.† The peacocks, no longer animated by passion, were silent amidst the woods, like holy saints‡ who have come to know the unreality of the world. The clouds, of shining whiteness, exhausted of their watery wealth, deserted the atmosphere, like those who have acquired wisdom, and depart from their homes.§ Evaporated by the rays of the autumnal sun, the lakes were dried up, like the hearts of men, when withered by the contact of selfishness.|| The (pellucid) waters of the season were suitably embellished by white water-lilies; as are the minds of the pure, by the apprehension of truth. Brightly, in the starry sky, shone the moon, with undiminished orb, like the saintly being who has reached the last stage of

When Kṛishna† heard this speech from Nanda, in regard to the worship of Indra,‡ he determined to put the king of the celestials into a passion, and replied: We, father, are neither cultivators of the soil, nor dealers in merchandise: cows are our divinities;§ and we are sojourners in forests. There are four branches of knowledge,—logical, scriptural, practical, and political.¹ Hear me describe what practical science is. Agriculture, commerce, and tending of cattle,—the knowledge of these three professions constitutes practical science. || Agriculture is the subsistence of farmers; buying and selling, of traders. ¹ These nomadic habits are entirely lost sight of in the parallel passages of those Purāṇas in which the juvenile life of Kṛishṇa is narrated. If the cowherds will attend to these suggestions, they will secure the favour of the mountain, of the cattle, and, also, mine.”

When Nanda and the other Gopas heard these words of Kṛishṇa, their faces expanded with delight, and they said that he had spoken well. “You have judged rightly, child,” exclaimed they. “We will do exactly as you have proposed, and offer adoration to the mountain.” Accordingly, the inhabitants of Vraja worshipped the mountain, presenting to it curds, and milk, and flesh; and they fed hundreds and thousands of Brahmans, and many other guests who came (to the ceremony), even as Kṛishṇa had enjoined: and, when they had made their offerings, they circumambulated the cows and the bulls, that bellowed as loud as roaring clouds.* Upon the summit of Govardhana, Kṛishṇa presented himself, saying "I am the mountain," and partook of much food presented by the Gopas; whilst, in his own form as Kṛishṇa, he ascended the hill, along with the cowherds, and worshipped his other self.¹ Having promised them many blessings,† the mountain-person of Kṛishṇa vanished; and, the ceremony being completed, the cowherds returned to their station.

¹ The Hari Vamśa says:‡ "An illusory Kṛishṇa, having become the mountain, ate the flesh that was offered:"

The Hari Vamśa affords, here, as in so many other places, proofs of its Dakṣiṇī origin. It is very copious upon the homage paid to the cattle, and their decoration with garlands and plumes of peacocks' feathers, of which our text takes no notice. But, in the south of India, there is a very popular festival, that of the Punjal, scarcely known in the north, when cattle are decorated and worshipped; a celebration which has, no doubt, suggested to the compiler of the Hari Vamśa the details which he describes.

Indra, offended by the loss of his offerings, causes heavy rain to deluge Gokula. Kṛishṇa holds up the mountain Govardhana, to shelter the cowherds and their cattle.

INDRA,* being thus disappointed of his offerings, was exceedingly angry, and thus addressed a cohort of his attendant clouds, called Samvartaka. "Ho! clouds," he said, "hear my words, and, without delay, execute what I command. The insensate cowherd Nanda, assisted by his fellows, has withheld the usual offerings to us, relying upon† the protection of Kṛishṇa. Now, therefore, afflict the cattle, that are their sustenance, and whence their occupation‡ is derived, with rain and wind. Mounted upon my elephant, as vast as a mountain-peak, I will give you aid, in strengthening the tempest." When Indra§ ceased, the clouds, obedient to his commands, came down, in a fearful storm of rain and wind, to destroy the cattle. In an instant, the earth, the points of the horizon, and the sky were, all, blended into one by the heavy and incessant shower. The clouds roared aloud, as if in terror of the lightning's scourge, and poured down uninterrupted torrents.¶ The whole earth was enveloped in (impenetrable) darkness by the thick and volumed clouds;

The cattle, pelted by the storm, shrunk, cowering, into the smallest size, or gave up their breath: * some covered their calves with their flanks; and some beheld their young ones carried away by the flood. The calves, trembling in the wind, looked piteously at their mothers, or implored, in low moans, as it were, the succour of Kṛishṇa.† Hari, beholding all Gokula agitated with alarm,—cowherds, cowherdesses, and cattle‡ all in a state of consternation,—thus reflected: “This is the work of Mahendra, in resentment of the prevention of his sacrifice; and it is incumbent on me to defend this station of herdsmen. I will lift up this spacious mountain from its stony base, and hold it up, as a large umbrella, over the cow-pens.” § Having thus determined, Kṛishṇa immediately plucked up the mountain Govardhana, and held it (aloft), with one hand, in sport, saying || to the herdsmen: “Lo! the mountain is on high. Enter beneath it, quickly; and it will shelter you from the storm. Here you will be secure, and at your ease, in places defended from the wind. fall." Upon this, all the people, with their herds, and their waggons and goods, and the Gopís, distressed by the rain, repaired to the shelter of the mountain, which Kṛishná held, steadily, (over their heads). And Kṛishná, as he supported the mountain, was contemplated, by the dwellers of Vraja, with joy and wonder; and, as their eyes opened wide with astonishment and pleasure, the Gopas and Gopís sang his praise.* For seven days and nights did the vast clouds, sent by Indra, rain upon the Gokula of Nanda, to destroy its inhabitants; but they were protected by the elevation of the mountain: and the slayer of Bala, Indra, being foiled in his purpose, commanded the clouds to cease.† The threats of Indra‡ having been fruitless, and the heavens clear, all Gokula came forth (from its shelter), and returned to its own abode. Then, Kṛishná, in the sight of the surprised inhabitants of the forests, restored the great mountain Govardhana to its original site.¹

¹ It seems not unlikely that this legend has some reference to the caves or cavern-temples in various parts of India. A remarkable representation of it occurs upon the sculptured rocks of Mahabulipoor. It is related, much to the same purport, in the Bhāgavata, &c. Śiśupāla, ridiculing the exploit, asserts that Govardhana was nothing more than an ant-hill.

CHAPTER XII.

Indra comes to Gokula; praises Kṛishṇa, and makes him prince over the cattle. Kṛishṇa promises to befriend Arjuna.

AFTER Gokula had been saved by the elevation of the mountain, Indra* became desirous of beholding Kṛishṇa. The conqueror of his foes, accordingly, mounted his vast elephant, Airāvata,† and came to Govardhana, where the king of the gods beheld the mighty Dámodara‡ tending cattle, and assuming the person of a cow-boy, and, although the preserver of the whole world, surrounded by the sons of the herdsmen.§ Above his head he saw Garuḍa, the king of birds, || invisible to mortals, ¶ spreading out his wings, to shade the head of Hari. Alighting from his elephant, and addressing him apart, Śakra, his eyes expanding with pleasure, thus spake to Madhusúdana: "Hear, Kṛishṇa, the reason why I have come hither,—why I have approached thee; for thou couldest not, otherwise, conceive it. Thou, who art the supporter of all, hast descended upon earth, to relieve her of her burthen. In resentment of my obstructed rites, I sent the clouds, to deluge Gokula; and they have done this evil deed. ††

Thou, by raising up the mountain, hast preserved the cattle; and, of a verity, I am much pleased, O hero, with thy wondrous deed. The object of the gods is, now, methinks, accomplished; since, with thy single hand, thou hast raised aloft this chief of mountains. I have now come, by desire of the cattle,¹ grateful for their preservation, in order to install you as Upendra; and, as the Indra of the cows, thou shalt be called Govinda."²* Having thus said, Mahendra took a ewer†

¹ Gobhīś cha choditah (गोभिश्च चोदितः); that is, 'delegated,' says the commentator, 'by the cow of plenty, Kāmadhenu, and other celestial kine, inhabitants of Goloka, the heaven of cows.' But this is, evidently, unauthorized by the text; as celestial cattle could not be grateful for preservation upon earth: and the notion of Goloka, a heaven of cows and Kṛishṇa, is a modern piece of mysticism, drawn from such sectarial works as the Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa and Hari Vamśa.

² The purport of Indra's speech is to explain the meaning of two of Kṛishṇa's names, Upendra and Govinda. The commentators on the Amara Kośa agree in explaining the first, the younger brother of Indra, इन्द्रानुजत्वादुपेन्द्रः, conformably to the synonym that immediately follows, in the text of Amara, ‡ Indrávaraja (इन्द्रावरज), a name that occurs also in the Mahābhārata; Kṛishṇa, as the son of Devakī, who is an incarnation of Aditi, being born of the latter, subsequently, to Indra. Govinda is he who knows, finds, or tends, cattle; Gāṁ vindati (गां विन्दति). The Paurāṇik etymology makes the latter the Indra (इन्द्र, quasi इन्द्र) of cows; and, in this capacity, he may well be considered as a minor or inferior Indra; such being the proper sense of the term Upendra (Upa in composition); as, Upa-purāṇa, 'a minor Purāṇa,' &c. The proper import of the word Upendra has, however, been anxiously distorted by the sectarian followers of Kṛishṇa. Thus, the commentator on our text asserts that Upa is, here, synonymous with Upari (उपरि), and that Upendratwa, 'the station of Upendra,' means 'rule in the heaven of heavens, Goloka;' a new creation of this sect, above Satya-loka, which, in the uncorrupt Paurāṇik system, is the highest of the seven Lokas: see Vol. II., p. 227. So the Hari Vamśa† makes Indra say:

ममोपरि यथेन्द्रस्त्वं स्थापितो गोभिरीश्वरः ।

उपेन्द्र इति कृष्णः त्वां गास्यन्ति दिवि देवताः ॥

"As thou, Kṛishṇa, art appointed, by the cows, Indra superior to me, therefore the deities in heaven shall call thee Upendra." The Bhāgavata does not introduce the name, though it, no doubt, alludes to it, in making the divine cow Surabhi, who is said to have come from Goloka with Indra, address Kṛishṇa, and say:

इन्द्रं नस्वाभिषेक्ष्यामी ब्रह्मणा नोदितावयम् ।

"We, instructed by Brahmā, will crown you as our Indra." Accordingly, Kṛishṇa has the water of the Ganges thrown over him by the elephant of Indra; and Indra, the gods, and sages praise him, and salute him by the appellation of Govinda. The Hari Vamśa§ assigns this to Indra alone, who says: "I am only the Indra of the gods: thou hast attained the rank of Indra of the kine; and they shall, for ever, celebrate thee, on earth, as Govinda:"

अहं किलेन्द्रो देवानां त्वं गावामिन्द्रतां गतः ।

Here a nymph has sat down with him, ornamented with flowers, fortunate in having propitiated Vishnú in a prior existence.† Having left her in an arrogant mood, because he had offered her flowers, the son of Nanda has gone by this road; for, see, unable to follow him with equal steps, his associate has here tripped along upon her toes, and, holding his hand, the damsel has passed, as is evident from the uneven and intermingled footsteps.‡ But the rogue has merely pastime". Professor Wilson's collected works, Vol. I., p. 124; Vol. III., p. 147.

A similar phraseology, as if with design to convey an impressive idea of the divine nature,—absolute inertness and ataraxy being the sublimest attributes of the Supreme,—has been employed elsewhere than in India. "Every providential energy of deity, about a sensible nature, was said, by ancient theologists and philosophers, to be the sport of divinity." Thomas Taylor, Metamorphosis, &c. of Apuleius, p. 43, note 1.

For the scholiastic Supreme of the Hindus,—which, only that it has neither mate nor emanations, may be compared with the Bythos of Gnosticism,—see note * to p. 253, supra. Brahma, the sole existence,—all else being sheer phantasm,—is pure spirit, and, therefore, incognitive. In short, it is not to be construed to the imagination, and is indistinguishable, save to the eye of faith, from a nonentity.

The Purāṇas generally modify this view, which is that of the Vedānta philosophy. See Vol. I., p. 41, note 2; and p. 172, notes 1 and *.

For extracts from Dr. South and Erigena, see the supplement to this note, at the end of the volume.

On which, one exclaimed “Kṛishná! Then Mádhava, coming amongst them, conciliated some with soft speeches, some, with gentle looks;§ and some he took by the hand: and the illustrious deity sported with them in the stations of the dance.¶ As each of the Gopís, however, attempted to keep in one place, close to the side of Kṛishná, the circle of the dance could not be constructed; and he, therefore, took each by the hand, and,

¹ This is a rather inexplicit statement;* but the comment makes it clear. Kṛishṇa, it is said, in order to form the circle, takes each damsel by the hand, and leads her to her place. There he quits her; but the effect of the contact is such, that it deprives her of the power of perception; and she contentedly takes the hand of her female neighbour, thinking it to be Kṛishṇa's. The Bhāgavata† is bolder, and asserts that Kṛishṇa multiplied himself, and actually stood between each two damsels:

रासोत्सवः संप्रवृत्तो गोपीमण्डलमण्डितः ।

Hauvette-Besnault's translation of the entire passage quoted above is as follows: "La fête du rāsa, embellie par le cercle des Gopīs, était menée par Cīchṇa, qui, usant de sa puissance magique et se plaçant entre elles, deux à deux, les tenait embrassées par le cou; et chaque femme croyait qu'il était auprès d'elle."

dance, to the music of their clashing bracelets, and songs that celebrated, in suitable strain, the charms of to mean, here, the Mañḍala, or ring; and the 'couples', to imply that Kṛishṇa was between every two. He quotes a verse* to this effect, from some other Vaishṇava work: अङ्गनामङ्गनामन्तरे माधवो माधवं चान्तरे चाङ्गनाः * * * * संजगौ वेणुना देवकीनन्दनः । "Between each two damsels was Mādhava; and between each two Mādhavas was a nymph; and the son of Devakī played on the flute". For, in fact, Kṛishṇa is not only dancing with each, but also, by himself, in the centre. For this the commentator on the Hari Vamśa cites a passage from the Vedas:

वस्ते पुरुरूपो वपुंषि ऊर्ध्वा तस्थौ त्रिविं रेरिहाणः ।†

Literally, "The many-formed (being) assumes (various) bodies. One form stood apart, occupying triple observance."† Now, if the verse be genuine, it probably refers to something that has little to do with Kṛishṇa; but it is explained to apply to the Rāsa; the form of Kṛishṇa being supposed to be meant, as wholly distinct from the Gopīs, and yet being beheld, by every one of them, on each side and in front of her. In the meditation upon Kṛishṇa which is enjoined in the Brahma Vaivarta, he is to be contemplated in the centre of the Rāsa Mañḍala, in association with his favourite Rādhā. But the Mañḍala described in that work is not a ring of dancers, but a circle of definite space at Vṛindāvana, within which Kṛishṇa, Rādhā, and the Gopīs divert them-

* The quotation seems to be prose.

† Rightly, and as quoted by the commentator:

पद्मा वस्ते पुरुरूपा वपुंष्यूर्ध्वा तस्थौ त्रिविं रेरिहाणा ।

This is the first verse of Rigveda, III., LV., 14. Professor Wilson, in his translation of the Rigveda, Vol. III., p. 98, renders it thus: "The earth wears bodies of many forms: she abides on high, cherishing her year and a half old (calf)."

‡ This interpretation does not represent accurately the meaning of the verse as explained by the commentator on the Harivamśa. But the commentator's explanation is not worth stopping to set forth.

the autumnal season.* Kṛishṇa sang the moon of autumn,—a mine of gentle radiance; but the nymphs repeated the praises of Kṛishṇa alone.† At times, one of them, wearied by the revolving dance, threw her arms, ornamented with tinkling bracelets, round the neck‡ of the destroyer of Madhu;§ another, skilled in the selves, not very decorously. This work has, probably, given the tone to the style in which the annual festival, the Rāsa Yātrā, is celebrated, in various parts of India, in the month of Kārttika, upon the sun's entrance into Libra, by nocturnal dances, and representations of the sports of Kṛishṇa. A circular dance of men and women, however, does not form any prominent feature at these entertainments; and it may be doubted if it is ever performed. Some of the earliest labourers in the field of Hindu mythology have thought this circular dance to typify the dance of the planets round the sun (Maurice, Ancient History of Hindus, Vol. I., p. 108; Vol. II., p. 356); but there is no particular number assigned to the performers, by any of the Hindu authorities, beyond its limitation to sixty-four. At the Rāsa Maṇḍala of the Brahma Vaivarta, Rādhā is accompanied by thirty-six of her most particular friends amongst the Gopīs; but they are, each, attended by thousands of inferior personages; and none of the crowd are left without male multiples of Kṛishṇa. The only mysticism hinted at, in that Purāṇa, is, that these are, all, one with Kṛishṇa; the varied vital conditions of one spirit being represented by the Gopīs and the illusory manifestations of Kṛishṇa; he himself being supreme, unmodified soul.

art of singing his praises, embraced him.* The drops of perspiration from the arms of Hari were like fertilizing rain, which produced a crop of down upon the temples† of the Gopís. Kṛishná sang the strain that was appropriate to the dance. The Gopís repeatedly exclaimed "Bravo, Kṛishná!" to his song. When leading, they followed him; when returning,‡ they encountered him; and, whether he went forwards or backwards, they ever attended on his steps. Whilst frolicking thus with the Gopís, they considered every instant, without him, a myriad § of years; and, prohibited (in vain) by husbands, fathers, brothers, they went forth, at night, to sport with Kṛishná, the object of their affection. || Thus, the illimitable being, the benevolent remover of all imperfections, assumed the character of a youth amongst the females of the herdsmen of Vraja; ¶ pervading their natures, and that of their lords, by his own essence, all-diffusive like the wind. CHAPTER XIV.

Kṛishṇa kills the demon Arishṭa, in the form of a bull.

ONE evening, whilst Kṛishṇa* and the Gopís were amusing themselves in the dance, the demon Arishṭa, disguised as a savage bull,† came to the spot, after having spread alarm through the station. His colour was that of a cloud charged with rain; he had vast‡ horns; and his eyes were like two (fiery) suns. As he moved, he ploughed up the ground with his hoofs; his tongue was repeatedly licking his lips; his tail was erect; the sinews of his shoulders were firm, and, between them, rose a hump of enormous dimensions; his haunches were soiled with ordure, and he was a terror to the herds; his dewlap hung low; and his face was marked with scars, from butting against the trees.§ Terrifying all the kine, the demon who perpetually haunts the forests in the shape of a bull, destroying hermits and ascetics, advanced.|| Beholding an animal of such a formidable aspect, the herdsmen and their women were exceedingly frightened, and called aloud on Kṛishṇa, who came to their succour, shouting, and slapping his arms in defiance.¶ When the Daitya heard the noise, he turned upon his challenger; and, fixing his eyes and pointing his horns at the belly of Keśava, he ran furiously upon the youth. Kṛishṇa stirred not from his post, but, smiling in sport and derision, awaited the near approach of the bull, when he seized him, as an alligator* would have done, and held him, firmly, by the horns, whilst he pressed his sides with his knees. Having thus humbled his pride, and held him captive by his horns,† he wrung his throat, as if it had been a piece of wet cloth, and, then, tearing off one of the horns, he beat the fierce demon with it, until he died, vomiting blood from his mouth. Seeing him slain, the herdsmen glorified Kṛishṇa,‡ as the companies of the celestials of old praised Indra,§ when he triumphed over (the Asura) Jambha.¹||

CHAPTER XV.

Kaṁsa informed, by Nárada, of the existence of Kṛishṇa and Balaráma: he sends Keśin to destroy them, and Akrúra, to bring them to Mathurá.

AFTER (these things had come to pass,) Arishṭa the bull-demon,* and Dhenuka, and Pralamba had been slain, Govardhana had been lifted up, the serpent Káliya had been subdued, the two trees had been broken, the female fiend Pútaná had been killed, and the waggon had been overturned, Nárada went to Kaṁsa, and related to him the whole, beginning with the transference of the child from Devakí to Yaśodá. Hearing this from Nárada, Kaṁsa was highly incensed with Vasudeva, and bitterly reproached him, and all the Yádavas, in an assembly of the tribe. Then, reflecting what was to be done, he determined to destroy both Ráma and Kṛishṇa, whilst they were yet young, and before they had attained to manly vigour; for which purpose he resolved to invite them from Vraja, under pretext of the solemn rite of the lustration of arms,† when he would engage them in a trial of strength with his chief boxers, Chánúra and Mushṭika, by whom they would, assuredly, be killed.‡ “I will send,” he said, “the noble Yadu,§ Akrúra, the son of Swaphalka,|| to Gokula, to bring them hither. them; and he is of unequalled might, and will surely kill them.* Or, if they arrive here, my elephant, Kuvalayāpīḍa, shall trample to death these two cow-boy sons of Vasudeva." Having thus laid his plans to destroy Rāma and Janārdana, the impious Kāṁsa sent for the heroic Akrūra, and said to him: "Lord of liberal gifts,¹ attend to my words, and, out of friendship for me, perform my orders. Ascend your chariot, and go hence to the station of the herdsman Nanda.† Two vile boys,‡ portions of Vishūu, have been born there, for the express object of effecting my destruction. ² Dhanur-maha (धनुर्मह). The same phrase occurs in the different authorities. In its ordinary acceptation, it would imply any military festival. There is one of great celebrity, which, in the south of India, closes the Daśaharā, or festival of Durgā, when military exercises are performed, and a field is ravaged, as typical of the opening of a campaign. Worship is paid to military implements. The proper day for this is the Vijaya daśamī, or tenth of the light half of Āświna, falling about the end of September or beginning of October. by Nārada.

KEŚIN, confiding in his prowess, having received the commands of Kāṁsa, set off to (the woods of) Vṛindāvana, with the intention of destroying Kṛishṇa. He came (in the shape of a steed), spurning the earth with his hoofs, scattering the clouds with his mane, and springing, in his paces, beyond the orbits of the sun and moon. The cowherds and their females, hearing his neighings, were struck with terror, and fled to Govinda for protection, calling upon him to save them. In a voice deep as the roaring of the thunder-cloud, Kṛishṇa replied to them: "Away with these fears of Keśin! Is the valour of a hero annihilated by your alarms? What is there to apprehend from one of such little might, whose neighings are his only terrors; a galloping and vicious steed, who is ridden by the strength of the Daityas?" Come on, wretch! Thus defying him to combat, Govinda went to encounter Keśin. The demon ran upon him, with his mouth opened wide; but Kṛishṇa, enlarging the bulk of his arm, thrust it into his mouth, and wrenched out the teeth, which fell from his jaws like fragments of white clouds.† Still, the arm of Kṛishṇa, in the throat of the demon, continued to enlarge, like a malady increasing, from its commencement, till it ends in dissolution.‡ From his torn lips the demon vomited foam and blood; his eyes rolled in agony; his joints gave way; he beat the earth with his feet;§ his body was covered with perspiration; he became incapable of any effort. The formidable demon,|| having his mouth rent open by the arm of Kṛishṇa, fell down, torn asunder, like a tree struck by lightning. He lay separated into two portions, each having two legs, half a back, half a tail, one ear, one eye, and one nostril. Kṛishṇa stood,¶ unharmed and smiling, after the destruction of the demon, surrounded by the cowherds, who, together with their women, were filled with astonishment at the death of Keśin, and glorified the amiable god with the lotos-eyes. Nārada, the Brahman,†† invisible, seated

- P. 26, notes, l. 5. Read चक्रस्त्वामन्वञ्चो.
- P. 30, note *. I am indebted to Dr. Muir for calling my attention to the Asura Swarbhānu of the Rigveda, V., XL. See Original Sanskrit Texts, Part I., pp. 469, 470 (2nd ed.).
- P. 31, notes, last line. That is to say, the Bhāgavata-purāṇa has Kuśa, where the Vishṇu-purāṇa has Leśa.
- P. 32, l. 2. For Kāśirāja, read king of the Kāśis. Compare supplementary note, a little below, on p. 57, notes 4 and §§. Also see my Benares, Ancient and Medieval, p. 7, notes 2 and 7.
- P. 32, note 2. Read Kāśiya.
- P. 32, note ||. My MSS. of the Vāyu-purāṇa are rather doubtful as to the reading Rāshtra.
- P. 33, l. 5. For another Divodāsa, see p. 146, l. 1. Regarding the Kāśis and the two Paurāṇik Divodāsas, I have elsewhere written as follows: “The Rigveda affords no warrant for connecting with the Kāśis any person whom it mentions. It speaks of Divodāsa, and it speaks of Pratardana; but only in later literature are they called father and son, and rulers of the Kāśis; and, where Kātyāyana, in his Rigvedānukramanīka, characterizes the latter as Kāśirāja, he may have expressed himself metachronically, under the influence of a modern tradition which he and his contemporaries accepted. As to the former, we find, indeed, in post-vaidik books, two Divodāsas; into whom a single personage seems to have been parted. One of them is son of Bhadryaśwa, as in the Rigveda; but it is the other, the son of Bhimaratha, and father of Pratardana, that is called king of the Kāśis. It may be added, that there is no ground for considering Bhadryaśwa and Bhimaratha to be two names of one and the same person.” Benares, &c., p. 9, note 1.
- P. 36, l. 1. Read Rītadhwaia.

- P. 39, notes, l. 9 ab infra. See, for Kāśirāja, supplementary note, a little above, on p. 32, l. 2.
- P. 40, notes, l. 2. Read Śānti Parvan.
- P. 40, note *. Kāśi, too, is a patronym of Kāśa.
- P. 43, notes, l. 3 ab infra. Read Śrinjaya.
- P. 44, note †. For Kshattraviddha, read Leśa. See p. 31, note †.
- P. 47, notes, l. 7 ab infra. Read द्रुह्यं चानुं च पूरं.
- P. 47, note ||. Substitute, for the whole: Ādi-parvan, sl. 3762.
- P. 55, notes, l. 3 ab infra. Instead of तव, some copies of the commentary read तस्य.
- P. 57, notes 4 and §§. We should translate: "king of the Āvantyas", to render Āvantya. In many such cases, the subjects of a ruler, not his territory, must be understood. Compare Kāśirāja, &c. &c.
- P. 59, notes, l. 21. The "Gehlots" or Gahlots are referred to Guhila or Gobhila, as their eponymist. See the Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. VI., pp. 500, 510, and p. 518, note n.
- P. 73, notes, l. 12. Read षट्.
- P. 73, note †. In one copy of the commentary, I find, as the reading, Mṛittikāvata,—the true name, in all probability. As to Mṛittikāvati,—by which appellation the same place seems to be designated,—it is represented as having been on the Narmadā. See the Harivaṃśa, sl. 1983.
- P. 74, notes, l. 13. Read अनमिचं.
- P. 84, notes † and §. It should have been added, that the capital of Videha is Mithilā. This is not the name of a country, as Professor Wilson—in Vol. III., p. 330, note 1, and elsewhere,—supposes it to be.
- P. 87, ll. 12, 14, and 18. The term "Kāśirāja", it is most likely, is no proper name here, but simply descriptive,—“king of the Kāśis.” See supplementary note on p. 32, l. 2, of this volume.
- P. 103, note . For of Avanti, the country, read Āvantyas.
- P. 103, note †. The reading should be, undoubtedly: पूर्वशोद्धवेति.
- P. 109, note |||. Pūru must be right. See the preceding note.
- P. 110, l. 4. Read Kaṃsa.
- P. 111, notes, l. 3 ab infra. Read Suvamśa.
- P. 126, note †. Also vide supra, p. 101, note ***.
- P. 146, note †. See supplementary note on p. 33, l. 5.
- P. 148, notes, l. 7. Read Hari Vamśa.
- P. 150, ll. 6 and 7. For an account, from the Mahābhārata, of the birth of Jarāsandha, see Original Sanskrit Texts, Part IV., pp. 247, 248. It is, in substance, as follows. Jarāsandha's father, King Bṛīhadratha, had two wives. After having long been barren, each of them bore him half of a son. These moieties, contemplated with horror, were cast away. Jarā, a female ghoul, that she may carry off the pieces the more readily, lays them together. The halves coalesce, and become endowed with life. The boy thus patched up wails out; whereupon the servants sally forth from Bṛīhadratha's palace, and the king and queen with them. The ghoulless assumes a human form, and makes over the infant to its father. She discloses that she has been worshipped, in ignorance of her real character, as the king's house-goddess, and adds, that, in gratitude for the homage done her, she has restored the monarch his son, the halves of whom, she alleges, were united into an animated whole quite independently of her will or power.

Bṛīhadratha subsequently directs his subjects, the inhabitants of Magadha, to celebrate a great festival in Jara's honour.

Herein, as Dr. Muir repeats after Professor Lassen, we are furnished with "an instance of the local adoration of particular deities in ancient India."

P. 158, note 1. See Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, Vol. II., pp. 466—476.

P. 158, note †. For the probably correct interpretation of the original, Kāśīrāja, see supplementary note on p. 32, l. 2.

P. 159, notes, l. 4. For hy, read by.

P. 159, note ††. In the Mahābhārata, Ādi-parvan, 3829, we read, that Bhīmasena married काशीं बलन्धरां, "Balandharā, daughter of the king of the Kāśis." M. Fauche, mistaking an accusative for a locative, has translated: "Bhīmasēna épousa dans Kāçi Balandharā." I doubt whether Kāśī or Kāśī, as the name of a city or kingdom, is anywhere to be met with in ancient Sanskrit literature.

P. 173, notes, last line. Read षट्त्रिंशत्समा.

P. 180, note 1; and p. 181, note *. We here have traces of a second dynasty of Kāśī kings. For the first, see pp. 30—40.

P. 186, note *. The king named between Nanda and Chandragupta I have conjectured, very hesitatingly, may have borne the appellation of Bṛīhanmanas. See my Benares, &c., p. 12, note 2.

P. 189, notes, l. 8. Read Priyadarśin.

P. 235, notes, l. 1. Read प्रदीप्तिनाग्निना.

P. 237, l. 3. Regarding Devāpi, see p. 153, note ††.

P. 240, notes, l. 4. A comma has disappeared from the end of the line.

P. 247, note ||. The passage here referred to occurs, likewise, in the Bṛīhad-āranyaka Upanishad, as V., 1: see Messrs. Boehtlingk and Roth's Sanskrit-Wörterbuch, Vol. I., under अच्. In Vol. V., again under अच्, the same learned and most meritorious lexicographers indicate the following similar stanza from the Atharva-veda,—X., VIII., 29:

पूर्णात्पूर्णमुदचति पूर्णं पूर्णेन सिच्यते ।

उतो तदव विद्याम यतस्तत्परिचिच्यते ॥

The commentator whom I intend, in my note under remark, is Ratna-garbha. See, a little below, supplementary annotation on p. 303, note 1, &c.

- P. 250, note ††. For an explanation of the term akshauhini, see a note on Book V., Chapter XXII.
- P. 252, note †. Read Śikshā.
- P. 259, note †. For the native, read Śrīdhara's.
- P. 261, notes, l. 7. Read places where.
- P. 261, note *. The mistake of the Translator is borrowed from his Bengal version.
- P. 262, notes, l. 4. Read fable, made.
- P. 262, note †. Read Three pages.
- P. 267, note *. See Vol. II., p. 337, supplementary note on p. 59, l. 8. On nāman, as alleged to signify 'essence'. see Burnouf's Introduction à l'Histoire du Bouddhisme Indien, Vol. I., p. 502, note 2, by Dr Theodor Goldstücker. Burnouf appends to the note these words: "Je n'ai pu jusqu'ici justifier cette interprétation par les textes."
- P. 280, note *. The stanza occurs in the MSS. accompanied by Śrīdhara's commentary.
- P. 284, note *. Read commentators.
- P. 286, note §. The words quoted by the Translator are Śrīdhara's.
- P. 290, note †. Both the scholiasts expound the stanzas here transcribed.
- P. 291, note †. Śrīdhara, who, equally with Ratnagarbha, cites the verses on dancing, attributes them to Bharata.
- P. 293, l. 12. Inadvertently, I have not corrected the Translator's "Brahmā" into Brahma. But see the next note.
- P. 293, note †. As Dr. Muir suggests to me, I should have added, that परस्मादः means 'preceding the Supreme,' not "the progenitor of the supreme (Brahma)", and परस्मात्परमः means 'supreme beyond the Supreme', not "beyond all finite objects". These hyperboles, if scarcely need be observed, are designed to express incomprehensibilities.
- P. 295, notes, l. 1. I have to thank Dr. Muir for calling my attention to the fact, that the adage adduced should be rendered: "He who does an act suited to his natural disposition incurs no guilt."
- P. 296, note †. The Translator has followed the text as accepted by Śrīdhara.
- P. 297, note §. The reading which Professor Wilson prefers is Śrīdhara's.
- P. 297, notes, l. 8. Read भूपदेशो यत्.
- P. 299, note †. भाण्डीरवटे is the lection of Śrīdhara.
- P. 303, note 1; and p. 304, notes § and †. Of the two commentaries on Book V., Ratnagarbha's and Śrīdhara's, the Translator has relied on the former, most generally, and, in speaking of "the commentator", refers thereto, except in those scattered cases where I have noted to the contrary. These two commentaries—the latter of which was inaccessible to me, when preparing my annotations on the first twelve Chapters of Book V.,—coincide, in a noticeable degree, not only in the authorities which they adduce, but in their elucidations,—as to their general drift, and, sometimes, as to the very words in which they are delivered. Ratnagarbha's, it seems from internal evidence, is the more recent composition.

In the Translator's note to which this annotation is appended, two explanations are cited, as if occurring "in different copies". They are, in fact, from different commentaries,—Ratnagarbha's and Śrīdhara's, respectively. The words of Śrīdhara, as professedly copied by Professor Wilson, deviate somewhat, as usual, from a punctual representation.

कास्तं is the lection which Śrīdhara prefers to the more ordinary खस्थम्.

- P. 304, notes, l. 2. Read -गतिनार्कः.
- P. 304, note *. In commenting on this stanza, Śrīdhara quotes from Daṇḍin, to whom, therefore, he must have been posterior.
- P. 308, note §. The quotation is given by Śrīdhara, also, who claims to take it from the Yoga-sāstra.
- P. 308, note ||. For commentator's, &c., read commentators' quotation explanatory of the technicalities pūṛaka, &c.
- P. 312, note *. It is Śrīdhara's reading to which the Translator here accords the preference.
- P. 316, note †. See, further, for Bala, p. 334, note ||.
- P. 317, note *. See, for Pāka, note || in p. 334.
- P. 318, note †. Read Ghaṇṭā.
- P. 326, notes, l. 6 ab infra. In a sermon by Dr. South, preached at Westminster Abbey, Feb. 22, 1684—5, is the following passage: "T is, as it were, the sport of the Almighty, thus to baffle and confound the sons of men by such events as both cross the methods of their actings and surpass the measure of their expectations."
- With the Biblos of the Gnostics compare "the superessential one of Plotinus, to whom neither Intelligence, nor Self-consciousness, nor Life, nor even Being can be attributed." Coleridge's Aids to Reflection, p. 158, (ed. of 1836).
- Erigena sublimates deity into something well-nigh as shadowy: "Deus itaque nescit se quid est, quia non est quid; incomprehensibilis quippe in aliquo, et sibi ipsi et omni intellectui." De Divisione Naturae, II., 28 (ed. Migne, col. 589).
- It seems, that, in the sphere of the profundities, the election lies, to most minds, between something like this and the popular theologies which offer, as their first principle, a Supreme constituted in the image of man.
- P. 329, note *. The quotation referred to, when read unmangled, turns out to be half of a Jānaki stanza:

अङ्गनामङ्गनामन्तरे माधवो माधवं माधवं चान्तरे चाङ्गना ।

इत्थमाकल्पिते मण्डले मध्यगः संजगी वेणुना देवकीनन्दनः ॥

- P. 331, notes, l. 3 ab infra. Read चपिताहितः.
